Hoboken, N.J., Aug. 12 (AP)—A spectacular fire that followed a series of explosions destroyed a pier an 1,100-foot Hudson River pier in blackened ruins today with damage estimated at the millions of dollars.

Flames towered 50 feet in the air and a pall of smoke blanketed the Hudson River New City area as 300 massed fire-fighting equipment brought the four-hour blaze under control at 12:30 a.m., E.D.T.

Scores were injured, none seriously, as the flames at the ancient pier 4 and damaged two adjacent piers extending 1,100 feet into the river to load ships for the fighting fronts of this war.

Fire officials said now on the shore end of the ruined pier at 2 a.m. Thursday that the pier was burned, firemen were able to confine it to a small area.

Bursting drums of highly inflammable liquid red the earlier blaze.

Acting fire chief Andrew H. Keller said the fire was of undetermined origin. He said on a barge which was transferring its cargo to a ship moored at pier 4 that "so far as there was no indication of sabotage.

He said there was no immediate estimate of the loss but it was unusually large.

Fourteen persons were taken to St. Mary's hospital for treatment of burns and smoke poisoning, while others, including firemen, were given first aid at the scene. Keller said none was seriously hurt.

Three barges and a derrick moored at the pier were burned, one of the barges sinking. A Liberty ship and a foreign cargo vessel were towed to safety in the river from the pier where flames reached dangerously close to the fighting ships.

Deputy Fire Chief Alfred Alvo, stevedore on the pier, as saying the fire broke out when drums of oxy-acetylene exploded, igniting both the pier and the barges.

GIRL RIDING BIKE KNOCKED TO ROAD

While riding her bicycle along Station Street on Friday afternoon 11-year-old Norma Parkhurst, 265 Ann Street was knocked to the pavement where she sustained painful leg abrasions and had to be treated at the Bellville General Hospital by Dr. G. H. Stobie. According to information released by investigating police the little Parkhurst girl was riding easterly on Station Street and when meeting oncoming traffic swerved her bike into the path of a truck driven by W. G. Rowland, R.R. No. 3 Belleville. Fortunately no fractured bones resulted.

POLICE RECEIVE CALL TO TRANSPORT DUTY

Activities in and around local police circles were of the routine nature during the past 24 hours. Police received a call from the attendant at the Smith Transport depot immediately east of the city limits on Highway No. 2 intimating that a dog was at large at that point. Provincial Police hastened to the scene but no signs of any such actions were in evidence. The police were told that two men and two women drove up in an old jalopy and acted rather suspicious. However, later it was established they had been apparently the worse for liquor and drove away before police arrived.

Two teen-aged lads were apprehended following a motor car along the bay bridge road in a dangerous and reckless manner the last night. They were escorted home by police and charges are pending as the youthful driver, or some 14 summers, was not even in possession of a driver's license.

CONTENTS OF HOPE CHEST ON DISPLAY

With sweet youth and sedate middle age making up the majority of the visiting Trent district merchantmen, and the occasional bachelor casting a quizzical eye at the strange article, the Hope Chest, one of the rich prizes to be given away at the Kiwanis Karnival is attracting plenty of attention in the windows of the Walker Hardware shop.

Across the street, Belleville's war worker beauties are on pictorial parade in the windows of McIntosh Brothers. They will be seen in person on Tuesday night in a preliminary review and on Wednesday in the actual contest where "Miss War Worker" trophy will act as one of the judges.

TRENTON

Janice Bradshaw, Four, Drowned Off Govt. Dock

Trenton, August 12 — Though artificial respiration was administered for an hour and a half, efforts failed to restore to life four-year-old Janice Bradshaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bradshaw, of the former a member of the R. C. A. F., when she fell into the Trent River about 1.30 Friday afternoon.

The girl, along with a playmate Betty Adams, age 3, left her home at 14 Sellers Ave., shortly after noon with the intention of playing in the school yard nearby. Shortly after, however, Billy turned up at the home of Mrs. Bradshaw with the message, that Janice had fallen into the river.

Instead of going to the school yard the children had walked more than a mile, crossed the town bridge, to play on the Government Dock on the west side of the river, where the little girl slipped from the dock into the river and exactly the same spot where four-year-old Jean Masterson was drowned just last Spring.

Police Officers were called and arrived immediately with grappling irons and with several boys, who had gathered at the time, began search for the body. Bill Smith, age 17, of 19 Dundas St. recovered the body of the child on his second dive but by which time artificial respiration had been applied.

Coroner Dr. E. A. McQuade, assisted by members of the Trenton Fire Department with their inhalator, and members of the Public Utilities Department worked over the child for over an hour but all to no avail.

She is survived her parents and several other small brothers and sisters.

Child is Struck

Trenton, Aug. 13—Helen McCubbin, 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart McCubbin of Warkworth, visiting at 3 Dundas St., Trenton, was struck by a car driven by Bernard Hermann, 1 Beaumont Pleasant Road, Toronto, on Thursday afternoon and suffered serious skin abrasions to her back shoulders and arms, also shock. She was taken to the office of Dr. E. A. McQuade for treatment and later to the home, where she was visited and today her condition was reported not serious.

No charge is said to have crossed the Highway directly in the path of the car which was proceeding east on Dundas St. at the corner of Sheriff St., and was carried fifteen feet on the front of the car.

Trouble Awaits Car Owners Who Tear Off Police Stickers

It has come to the attention of police officials in Belleville that stickers, cautionary, left on motor vehicles found in violation of the city parking regulations in the downtown area, are being torn off and disregarded.

The majority of motorists finding police stickers affixed to their windshields immediately report to the police station, but some of the more flagrant cases of late have resulted in the guilty parties simply tearing up the police stickers and letting them altogether. Of course we have the licence plate numbers of these vehicles and can quite easily bring them into court if need be," explained Deputy Chief Harman as the matter was being discussed for the benefit of the press at police court today.

"If such cases are brought to your attention in the future bring them into court. Disregard for police warnings and notices is a serious matter and if brought into court they will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law," warned Crown Attorney Donnan.

PLENTY HAPPENED AT SHOW

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 12 (AP)—A chilling aerial scare would be written about events that have happened at a local theatre in the last 18 months. The neighborhood show in that time has been burglarized at least 12 times, with 31 bullet holes shots directed at film villains made in the screen, necessitating a costly installation of a new one, and then fire destroyed the new screen and all sound equipment.

Fun for All At the Karnival

Plans have been completed for the Kiwanis Karnival to be held in this city on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights of next week. The locale will be Bridge Street East from Front Street to Church St., while the Armouries lawn will be used to set the stage for the vaudeville program to be given each night prior to the opening of the gaming.

Jack White, chairman of the program committee has arranged an excellent program for each night, it being varied with singing, comic stunts and act of a high calibre. The main event will be the bathing beauty exhibition by Cpl. A. Bell of R. C. A. F. of Trenton station. The latter has been given all the leading cities of Canada and the United States and is really worth while. A comedian from the same station will also be on hand. For entertainments, the services of the Women's quartette from Mountain View Station has been secured. Miss Ethel Smith has consented to play the piano for the Karnival with some of her pupils will give a program. For the children's entertainment in a bed-making contest, while the Kinsmen and Kinsmen club members will stage a tug-of-war. That last should be a real thriller.

A variety of games have been arranged for the Karnival, with something new will be given. Of course the draw for the Chevrolet Coupe will be the chief item of interest but the 10-pin Chesterfield draw, at the close of the Karnival Kiwania Queens under the direction of Mrs. Jack McVeigh is attracting a lot of attention. There will be fun and frolic for all and the money that is secured will be used to further the projects of the Kiwanis Club of the club. So come on down for the three nights and enjoy the fun.

Provincial Police today are seeking the identity of a hit-and-run motorist driver whose truck struck a painter on the bay bridge Friday afternoon and left him in a serious condition.

The workman, 49-year-old Leo Langlois of Ottawa, was leaning over painting the metal frame work of the bay bridge when he was struck on the hip and crushed by a passing red stake truck. Eye witnesses say the trucker continued some distance north on the right-of-way before stopping his truck. After looking back the trucker then proceeded northerly along the bay bridge road without stopping at the scene of the accident. The injured man was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital in the Belleville Burial Company ambulance.

At first it was reported Langlois had sustained severe fractures of the legs. However, subsequent X-rays proved no fractures had resulted. Eye witnesses provided Provincial Police with a good description of the truck and police hope to apprehend the driver unless he immediately reports the matter in person.

BERNICE LUNDBERG
Universal

Don't crowd boys, the line forms up on the right. Pictured above is Jean Clarke, twenty-four year old Stewart-Warner-Alemite contestant, whose blonde beauty is already wowing her male admirers. One-hundred-and-twenty pounds of Canadian Pulse pulchritude, Jean has been doing her bit at Stewart-Warner-Alemite for nearly three years, spurring on the production pace and producing component parts for army, navy and air force equipment.

Jean is rounding out her family ties of service to her country. She has three brothers in the Air Force while another gave his life fighting in India. She loves dancing and swimming, and also has a prospective fiancee, her husband. A sister is married to Major George Pepburn of Picton, now overseas with the Canadian Army.

Another bundle of charm that smiles a daily greeting to her co-workers at Deacon Bros. Ltd., is grey-eyed, dark haired Mildred Day, who makes a daily trek to work from her home on the Canniton Road. She is the daughter of Mrs. Frank Day, and like her sisters at the Deacon plant has to face contest judges for the first time. Mildred is a winsome lass, has plenty of punch and personality and has been a collar-maker for the past year. Modest as to her chances of winning the title she has a prospective Mildred, however, will be in these battlins and her chances are more than good.

A beauty critic once called a charming young lady "cute". This is Universal's idea of that word—plus. Dark-eyed, dark haired Bernice Lundberg, one-hundred-and-five pounds of brunette charm, should be one of the outstanding contenders for the title of Miss War Worker. She stands so-high and is one of the most popular fairies employed at Universal where she has been employed for the past eighteen months. The second married contestant. In the competition, Bernice's heart is on the Normandy beaches where Husband Conner Jack Lundberg of the 34th Infantry is assisting Major Jack Courtney to knock the Luftwaffe from Norman skies. She was formerly Bernice Cook, daughter of Herbert Cook, 30 Dunbar Street. Twenty-two years of age, Bernice is typical Canadian girl. The first time in a war worker contest and it wouldn't surprise us if she won.

Aboard a joint expeditionary flagship, Marianas Islands, July 12 —(delayed)—(AP) — Chief Radioman George Ray Tweed, 42, a native of Portland, Ore., emerged today from nearly 1,000 days of hiding in the jungled mountains of Guam to relate the heretofore untold story of the tiny marine garrison's valiant defence of that island against the Japanese early in the Pacific War.

Tweed told his amazing tale less than 36 hours after he had been rescued from Guam by a United States warship.

He obviously was elated at the Admiral's decision to dispatch him immediately to California for a reunion with his wife, and their two sons, 8 and 3. They have presumed him dead or a prisoner since Guam's fall, Dec. 10, 1941.

Japanese planes bombed and strafed Guam continuously for three days and on Dec. 8, 1941, began landing.

"We had so few guns, so little ammunition, there wasn't much we could do to defend. We had only about 150 marines, a few scattered naval personnel and the island defence company . . .

"The Japs forced a landing and rolled into the town shooting.

"The marines fought them street by street, house by house . . . They fought to the last man."

Tweed said he and other navy radioman rounded up canned food, got Tweed's car and drove 10 miles from town. They took to the jungles and soon met three other navy men.

"We ate the food and we had kept out of sight. I never was captured but on Sept. 12, 1942, the Japs grabbed two of our group and killed them. They located two more in a hiding place the following month and killed them Oct. 22.

"After that I was entirely on my own."

Finally he discovered a high cliff facing the sea. That became Tweed's hermitage.

He caught rain water for drinking and washing and made weekly nocturnal forays for food.

His vantage point let he could see Japanese planes fly off, and could look eastward over the broad Pacific toward home.

His rescue came two years and seven months after the Japanese landings at Guam.

Union Nationale Govt. Will Take Office August 30

Quebec, Aug. 12 (CP)—Members of Premier Godbout's Liberal government began clearing up unfinished business around the Quebec legislature in preparation for the change over to the Union Nationale government of Maurice Duplessis, which will be sworn in Aug. 30. Mr. Duplessis announced the date of the swearing in and it was later confirmed by Mr. Godbout.

The Union Nationale representation in the legislative assembly was increased to 47 last night following an official count of ballots in Matapedia-Matane riding in Montreal where previously a Liberal, Edmo Hamelin had been reported elected by a majority of 26 votes. The new count gave Dr. J. P. Caillen, Union Nationale, a majority of 29.

The defeat of Mr. Hamelin cut the number of Liberal members in which with four Bloc Populaire members, one C.C.F. and one National, brought the total opposition to 43.

A native of Ottawa he was a member of the Prince of Wales Own Regiment prior to his appointment to the Canadian Army in 1940 with the rank of Captain. He went overseas in July, 1941 and was promoted to his present rank in March of this year.

Organized Victory Gardeners Use Big Business Methods

By K. Z. PALTIEL

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Aug. 12—(CP)— Toronto's backyard farmers count their returns in exercise, health and a more or less ample supply of fresh table vegetables, but it is the organized community association that has put the Victory Garden into the realm of industrial enterprise.

An estimated 2,500 or more community gardens are producing over this large as 12 acres, this summer expect to save $20 to $30 each, or $50,000 to $75,000 in all, on a 2,500 square feet through their cooperative efforts. This is based on an estimated cost of $5 to $10 for seeds, fertilizer and tools, and $15 to $40 at retail prices.

Largest of the organized groups is the community gardens association, a creature of the United Welfare Fund of Toronto, with a membership of 700 families. The association has 10 blocks of land, ranging in size for two to 12 acres, with 900 plots, situated on vacant city lots or donated land. Its operation is the keynote of such community enterprises, with members collectively buying pipe to carry city-supplied water to their plots.

Greater financial advantages to community gardens lie in mass production, their ability to obtain seeds, fertilizers and growing materials at lower cost and because of the amount of land involved in such co-operative undertakings makes for less waste space.

Wholesale dealers have increased home gardening has not affected their business. One, George Hardwick, said the produce of Victory Gardens has not made "a particle of difference" to prices. George Rush of the Ontario Department of Agriculture says home and community gardening has had the effect of educating people to eat more vegetables in greater variety, resulting in the end in benefit to the commercial growers, canners and dealers.

War Records' Value

History is being written in this most expansive of wars which touches the lives of all wherever they may be. No one is living so far from civilization that he cannot be influenced by what has been taking place and what will take place as a consequence of this struggle. The Hamilton Spectator points out this fact in speaking of the importance of war records by local communities and refers to the action which the State Library of Connecticut and the Connecticut War Council have taken to interest servicemen and civilians in that state in local history. It calls for the preservation of war records saying that "if we do not preserve the records of our present activities the history of our achievements cannot later be properly written. Your aid is necessary for the collection of a complete record of the contribution your community has made to Connecticut's war effort."

What is said with regard to the communities in that state would hold for communities in Canada, the Spectator says, and further quotes from the Connecticut appeal, "every city and town wishes to secure a true record of the military activities of its sons and daughters. Lists of those in the services, photographs, biographical sketches and published accounts of camp and battle experiences should be preserved. You can help by collecting and making available such information about your own relatives and friends.

"If you receive letters and other records from those in the services you should see to it that they carefully as a duty to the writer. They will be of interest and value to him in the future years. And if they are saved the historian will be able to write a rich and living record for our descendants, rather than a dry-as-dust chronicle."

Hitler Decrees Nazi Salute

Hitler has decreed that the refusal of German officers to replace the army salute with the "Heil Hitler" salute shall be considered by military court-martial as an offence carrying the death penalty.

Some time be desperately serious in the Germany army when an upstart statesman, dictator and tyrant has ordered a salute to be generally recognized throughout the Germany army which exalts himself in the eyes of the state. It may be one of the sinister steps taken by this Hun monster of crime to test the army officers Hitler, guarded by Himmler's murderous protection, possibly so anxious and desperate that he thinks he can find in this salute a means of catching generals and officers who do not support his regime. To find that would mean the officer's end, a death and later is cast after generals. Since he cannot rub out the Allies who are going to thrash him finally to the greatest licking ever given a cruel nation and a monster, he would rub out Germans who he knows are with him.

German tyranny has gone far but it cannot win the war. German militarism cannot win the struggle. Hitler and his gang and his system are on the last foot of destruction. Like a trapped rat he turns this way and that, hoping to find some means of escape from his fate. He tries to pin faith on robot bombs which serve no military purpose, except the Hitlerian "principle" of total terrorism. He has Germany talking of secret weapons, but they and talk at this late hour cannot do what he wants them to do. He pins his faith on what might prodically be called miracles, but none of these is to come to pass to save him. Like semi-historical tyrants, he pins his faith on witches, sycophants, stargazers and on a band of cutthroats which he has assembled about him. But there will be no miracles. There will be the steady downpouring of bombs upon Hunland, the increasing pressure of the East, West and South fronts, and the inevitable collapse of Germany. Hitler fought for evil, evil is his defence and it cannot defend him and save him. The powers of right and justice and powers directed to noble ends are striking at decadent Germany and her degenerate criminal leaders. No evil wish, no incantation to the fiends he has served can save Hitler. They will mock him. His "Heil Hitler" he may deem a salute but it won't charm as it did the Nazis in other days.

His Nazi salute cannot win the war. His naturally deep anxiety which prompts him to deeds of horror cannot make him victorious, the things he trusted in have betrayed or will betray him. He has nothing left now but to hope and hope madly. He may do terrible deeds of shame and woe, but still he cannot win. Mightier than he or his Hun warriors and all their iniquitous associations, plots and plans are the Allies on the field of battle fresh for the conflict, with confidence clear and seeking one alim to cleanse the world of German tyranny and bloodlust.

The Allied armies, the Allied navies and the Allied air forces and the spirit of the Allied peoples — these are the conquering legions that are crushing Hitlerism and militarism and autocracy. Hitler has no match for these for his satellites are evil and criminal. The world of right is again scoring the triumph over the self-seeker and cruel tyranny.

Cats Is Cats

In a recent public opinion poll in Vancouver, 63.7 percent of those questioned wanted all cats kept indoors at night, says The Vancouver News-Herald.

This verdict is of more concern to human beings than to cats.

Cats are sturdy and independent animals. They walk by their lone, and they walk at night. No human has yet been able to prove conclusively that a cat and make it stick. Vancouver's cats will continue to enjoy their nocturnal strolls and festivities, even if they have to leave home altogether to maintain their fundamental rights.

But the fact that 63.7 percent of our citizens think it not only desirable but also possible to keep cats indoors at night is a matter of grave concern.

He eats the things he "ought to" instead of the things he wants to. He clothes himself in accordance with absurd tradition instead of according to his natural reaction to the current weather. He keeps his nose to the grindstone and develops a nervous breakdown when all the birds around him are singing. He puts up on the front porch railing and loaf like a reasonable being. He works himself up into a fury over international questions which don't exist in the first place and wouldn't matter if they did.

This is what he calls "civilization" and now he wants to apply it to cats.

Fortunately, cats is cats, and in spite of 63.7 percent of the citizens of Vancouver, the chances are that Vancouver's cats will continue to walk by their lone—and at night, too.

Northern Folklore

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's plan to broadcast a drama based on the life of Twelve Foot Davis brings to mind the fact that the Peace River country had its share of characters whose contributions to the folklore of the province would be considerable if all the information regarding them were available, says The Peace River Record-Chronicle.

A start was made last year when a university professor was assigned to the gathering of such information and a further step is being taken this year when those interested are to assemble in Banff to plan and discuss the problem of gathering folklore and developing a "nose" for folklore.

In various parts of the district are pioneers who are rich in reminiscences and early days. The problem is to get the raconteurs of such tales and the recorders together. And the matter is one which needs our immediate attention, for time moves relentlessly and many of our pioneers are passing to their great reward.

A worthy community project would be the setting up of committees to gather such information from residents of the district, prepare manuscripts and forward them to representatives of the organization now engaged in this work. Such a project would be full of interest and would perpetuate the activities of Twelve Foot Davis, Baldy Red and the dozens of other men and women who played an important part or added spice to the life of the early days.

JUST FOLKS.

They seldom grow in prison plots,
Nor deck a maiden's hair.
They have no love for city lots
Or shops where strangers stare.
They choose the cool, sequestered spots
And the sweet country air.

They do not ask for greenhouse glass
To shield them from the cold.
They brave the winds and rains that pass
The hills and fields to hold.
They deck the roadways with a mass
Of blossoms, blue and gold.

They ask no culture save their own;
No shelter save the trees.
To them is nature's fury known
And nature's every mood.
And yet, the fairest orchid grown
Is loved no more than these!

Pyle in Normandy: Bombs From Allied Planes Give Pyle Real Scare as They Fall Close

In Normandy. (By Wireless)—It is possible to become so entrenched by some of the spectacles of war that you are momentarily equitvated away from your own danger.

That's what happened to our little group of correspondents as we sat in a French farmyard, watching the mighty bombing of the German lines just before our break-through.

But that happy state didn't last long. As we watched, there crept into our consciousness a realization that shadows of exploding bombs were easing back toward us, flight by flight, instead of gradually forward, as the plan called for.

Then we were horrified by the suspicion that, those machines, high in the sky and completely detached from us, were aiming their bombs at the smokeine on the ground—it. and a gentle breeze was drifting the smoke back toward us.

An indescribable kind of panic came over you at such times. You stood tenard in muscle and frozen in intellect, watching each flight approach and pass over us, feeling trapped and completely helpless.

And then all of an instant the universe became filled with a giant whistling sound as though you were in a mammoth dry gourd. I doubt that any of us had ever heard that sound before, but instinct told us what it was. It was bombs in the air, hurtling down through the air above us.

Many times I've heard bombs whistle or swish or rustle, but never before had I heard bombs rattle. I still don't know the explanation of it. But it is an awful sound.

We dived. Some got in a dugout. Others made foxholes and ditches and some got behind a garden wall—although which side would be "behind" was anybody's guess.

I was too late for the dugout. The nearest place was a wagon-shed which framed one end of the stone house. The rattle was right down you. I remember crouching on the ground flat, all spread out like the carcass of a deer hanging by steam rollers, and then of squirming like an eel to get under one of the upper beams of the shed.

An officer whom I didn't know and hadn't noticed before, jumped at the same time, simultaneously. In feeling it was hopeless to move farther. The bombe were already coming overhead.

We lay with our heads slightly up—the two snakes—staring at each other. That was all that both our minds and in our eyes, asking each other what to do. Neither of us knew. We said nothing. We just lay sprawled, gaping at each other in a futile appeal, our faces about a foot apart and still in dust.

There is no description of the sound and fury of those bombs except to say that they were long awaiting for darkness. The feeling of the blast "through" was that of air struck you in hundreds of continuing flashes of thunder, close by and rang. You could feel quick little waves of concussions on your chest and in your throat.

At last the sound died down and we looked at each other rather sheepishly. Gradually we left the foxholes and dugout and began to came out to see what the sky had in store for us. But the sky itself could see other waves were approaching from behind.

When a man could pass a little to the side of us we were garrulously grateful for the relief. We flew directly overhead. Time and again the rattle would start up on us. Bombe struck in the orchard to our left. They struck in orchards and fields to the right and as far as half a mile behind us. Everywhere about us the bombs but our group came through unhurt.

I can't record what any of us said. Words fail to describe such those horrible climaxes. I believe a person's feelings at such times are indescribable, which is a blessing. You must wait, that's all. You do remember your own heartbeats and muscle and nerves.

An hour or so later I began to get sore all over, and by mid-afternoon my back muscles ached so much that I'd been beaten with a club. It was simply the result of muscles tensed throughout the body for too long against anticipated shock. And then I began thinking about War Correspondent Ken Crawford, a friend from back in the old Washington days, who I knew was several hundred yards ahead of us.

As far as I knew, he had been in the Fourth Division. I didn't know whether he was with the divisions on either side—which also were being hit. But I knew he was there.

Three days later, back at camp, I learned that AP Photographer Frank Noel was killed in that bombing and that Ken was safe.

We came back to headquarters sprawling and stood up again to shave. Then I learned that Ken is now the error had been caught and checked. The bomb again were falling where they were intended, a mile or so ahead.

Ken told me the way a thousand bombs hitting within a few seconds does make the air shake and how the air where you are standing. There was a sense of dread in anticipation as it gradually eased as the tumult and destruction moved slowly forward.

Ottawa, July 29.—Some of the 245 members of the House of Commons entertain considerable parliamentary assistants and a few who represent constituencies near session means a moving day. And if they have known it was coming they will be Sunday as parliament is expected to prorogue Monday.

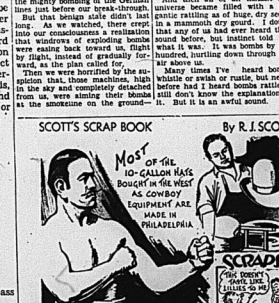
It means closing up an office and a home, even though the office is but a hall bedroom in government buildings and the home may be a room in the Y.M.C.A. or a boarding house or an hotel.

It means a break in intimate associations established over a period of six months and a return to associates in Belleville, in the constituency, except for the contacts maintained through correspondence and occasional visits.

All during the last week members have been busy in their rooms sorting out letters and documents. They are filling their suitcases and the wardrobes also served them throughout the session.

Many of their files have to be taken back so they can complete their constituency work that they have done during the session.

Most members have to do a lot more than sit in the House and in committees. Spoken engagements speak themselves. Their supporters and friends, not to mention others, write to them. They have to do so that they can to get information requested on departmental matters on their way or that.



As the House pull out of Ottawa for points between Halifax and Victoria next week they will be members' offices closed by law and baggage cars loaded with boxes of books, letters and documents. Homework members are taking back to their constituencies.

Puzzler: Justice Minister St. Laurent, considered one of Canada's ablest lawyers, would like to know where the legal term "party politic" originated and what it means.

The interest stimulated this to John Diefenbaker, Progressive Conservative member for the Prince Albert constituency in Saskatchewan, also a lawyer. He asked the minister, who asked what the term "body corporate and politic meant."

SINUS TROUBLE

Milk and milk products are, and, as I say, I repeat, always will be the chief source of certain essentials of good nutrition, shortage of which is responsible for much of the trouble of the physical deficiencies of American children, youths and adults.

These essential are (1) calcium and phosphorus (there is a physiological balance between calcium and phosphorus metabolism), (2) vitamins A, D and G (B2, Riboflavin) and (3) the complete proteins that it, proteins containing the amino acids required to maintain life and promote growth.

Some physicians who conceive such an antipathy to milk remind us of those "vegetarians" who do not exclude fish, eggs, fowl, game, etc. from their diet. Few objectors to milk would exclude also cream, butter and cheese.

One correspondent informs me that I should know better than to tell people with sinus trouble to drink milk, for "milk forms mucus" and that is another name for sinus trouble. Another reader says he has Ben told frequently that people sinusitis should not drink milk, that sinusitis is usually caused by milk is one of the worst offenders in allergy. Plenty of calcium is all right, but reader complains that milk in the form of milk or other foods to which the patient is allergic.

Milk is a pretty common food, so it is understandable that a good many persons may be allergic to it. But it would be a rare case indeed with sinus trouble or anything resembling sinusitis that was caused by milk from the diet without having deteriorating effects. In fact, if she is allergic to milk. If specific skin tests or the diet elimination tests show one is allergic to milk then it would be foolish to exclude it and continue to be allergic.

Vitamin A Found In Leafy Greens

Why are leafy green and yellow vegetables mentioned particularly amongst the foods which should be eaten every day?

The answer, according to the Nutrition Division at Ottawa, is that green and yellow vegetables such as spinach, kale, chard, parsley, carrots, broccoli and sweet potato, are rich sources of Vitamin A. This is the vitamin that promotes growth, increases resistance to infection and helps the eyes and skin healthy. Dairy products, liver and tomato also supply Vitamin A.

Enough Vitamin A for one day is supplied by one helping of leafy green or yellow vegetable plus any one of the following: one serving of liver, two ounces of cheese, three glasses of milk, three one-inch cubes of butter, or one serving of tomatoes.

'FAIR' JUDGE

DOROTHY STONE, Toronto War Worker Contest winner, who will act as one of the judges at the Kiwanis War Workers' Karnival here on Wednesday night on the Armouries Lawn.

Here she is, ladies and gentlemen an eighteen-year-old package of pulchritude, whose dazzling smile, pleasing disposition, and other feminine qualifications won for her the title of "Miss War Worker, Toronto", at a recent contest for the girls who do their bit in war industry plants in that city.

She is Miss Dorothy Stone, of the De Havilland Aircraft Company of Toronto, a lovely young lady; who has consented to act as one of the judges at the Kiwanis War Workers' Contest to be staged on the Armouries Lawn here next Wednesday night. A preliminary contest will be held on Tuesday evening at eight o'clock. Miss Stone, however, will be here only, for the actual judging on night following.

Is Not Sport-Minded.

The De Havilland beauty, formerly a stenographer, has worked at the De Havilland plant for the past eight months. Slim, svelte, she says she'll have a wonderful appetite, but do not indulge in sports or strenuous exercise. By way of running around to different departments checking on supply requisitions keeps her slim.

She "just loves to work around airplanes" and is impatiently waiting for her first ride in a Mosquito.

The Toronto winner is a newcomer to contests. She dusted "Toronto's finest" at a police game preliminary held at Sunnyside Amusement Park, a contest staged by the Perth Business Men's Association.

But don't cover the judges stand, boys. Dorothy will give you the full benefit of her charm and smile, —but there it "ends. Romantically inclined males had better take warning, for her heart has "done gone" and the prize money she has won is being carefully saved for a trousseau. In fact she has just returned from a plane journey to Gimli, Man., where her fiance LAC. L. E. Lenehan, R.C.A.F., is stationed.

She is a comely miss, five feet, six inches in height, with a bust measurement of 36 inches, hips 34, waist 24 and a weight of 115 pounds.

Ten in Family.

The Toronto miss was educated in her native city and is a member of a family of ten. A brother, Albert, of the Royal Canadian Engineers, is in Christie Street Hospital, recovering from an illness. Dorothy has a brother Richard in the Army, joining the St. John Ambulance Brigade and became a V.A.D.

Associated with Miss Stone in the judges' stand will be Flight Officer D. E. J. Bristol, R.C.A.F. (W.D.) of Mountain View, and another to be selected.

How's Your Report Card In School of Good Looks?

BEAUTY By Helen Jameson

NOSES! WHAT OF THEM?

No matter what kind of a nose she has, a girl does not think it. In youth, few noses are satisfactory to their owners. Mothers are watching sweet, perfumes or giving one warning that something is wrong with the kitchen stove, but frightens from a decorative standpoint.

Noses, by and large, are not observe them on the faces of your fellow creatures, unless they conform to other features serve very well in the facial composition. It is just that almost all of us like her own nose; the other girl's note always seems to look better. As birthdays come along, the nose agony subsides. It is, as a rule, merely a youthful peeve.

Before the war, when thousands of physicians were serving us, it was possible to have a long nose bobbed, an ugly one remodeled. That is practically out of the question at the present time. An unlovely nose is not a life and death matter; the surgeons are needed with us are engaged in more serious pursuits. Even in the old days, they would not perform surgery unless the affliction really interfered with happiness, made for inferiority complex, a social misfit.

A common disfigurement is the nose with collapsed nostrils. It is narrow and pinched-looking. This abnormality can be corrected this condition, provide normal width. Surgery only is necessary. Improved, but breathing is freer and fuller.

Then there's the nose that just disfigure a man, or worry him to any extent but it throws a girl's face entirely out of form and harmony. It may cause her to develop an inferiority complex, or bother and fret her that she retires from social ocets. Who can blame her if she seeks the plastic surgeon for whatever help he can give her? Noses that do not make the good-looks grade are the so-called saddle nose, the long one with the beak-like tip that makes one look like a picture of a witch; the bulbous nose, with nostrils too wide; and the one that twists to one side.

Time was when many specialists who featured remodeling were chargeable. Medical men of high standing were too dignified to concern themselves with affairs of appearance. Now old doctors realize that how one looks has much to do with her one feels. So, men of excellent reputations have specialized in this line of work, and not the quacks, and cosmetic surgery has become respectable.

The Marry-Go-Round

Cheerful Thoughts on Marriage

I am not a "home and buggy" ... but a "plush sofa," or even a Pollyanna. But I still believe that old-fashioned one-way marriage is better than any substitute that has been offered for it.

I believe that marriage will survive all the attacks made upon it by the cynics, free-love advocates, the Freudians, the divorcees and pseudo-philosophers. It will be going strong when these are only a memory.

That there are just as many lovely wives, faithful husbands and happily married people in the world today as there ever were, in spite of the war, the divorce mills and all the front-page scandals.

That there may seem to have been less significance and more tension these days, but there will always be intrinsically the same old setting. There is something in that assurance of permanence, that "until death do us part" feeling, that "forever and ever" idea, which we can't escape from—and don't really want to.

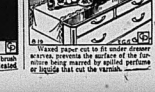
That it is a woman's love and belief in her man and a man's love and tenderness for "his woman", which make the world go round, and keep it swinging in its orbit among the stars.

That there are two kinds of women today. The career-woman who gets a thrill in winning her own laurels, and the woman who gets an equal kick out of plunking the laurels on her man. Each of these can be happy with the right man, and neither of them wants to die without marrying.

That the free-thinkers who cheer girls onto the open pursuit of the elusive male, are spoiling the love-game for women, making spinsters plentiful and dealing a solar plexus blow to marriage.

That if they knew their psychology, they would know that in his love-instincts every man is as primitive as Adam; and that he will forgive a woman for asking him to lie for her or for her—but never for asking him to LOVE her.

That marriage comes to women seven varieties these days. But there is no question of degree about it. Each can be just a little bit in love —but you can't be just a little bit married or a little bit dead.



That the fifty-fifty marriage is a glittering success; because it is a partnership and a partnership — not a graft or a dictatorship. In fact, I think it is the ONLY marriage of the future.

C.N. RAILROADERS PROLONG SERIES BY BEATING SACOS

Johnny Bawden Allows Five Hits and Only Two After Second

TED HENN EJECTED

Terminating in the top half of the eighth inning when the SACO "Marines" could not field nine players, according to O.A.S.A. softball rules, the third game of the City League playdowns series went to the C.N.R. "Railroaders" by the full inning score of 13 to 7 to have the series stand at two games to one in the series in which they continues on Monday.

Complications came when an interference play was called against the Marine by the umpire in charge following which verbal protests were rampant on the part of the SACOs with the final result several players Teddy Henn being ejected from the pastime by Umpire Harold Bawden for the players' continued unnecessary protests. The ejection of Henn left the Marines with but eight players and forced the conceding of the game at the full inning score of 13 to 7 in favor of C.N.R., who had forged to the lead with a seventh inning rally of eight runs to practically clinch the decision regardless as to the outcome.

Marines Once in Lead.

SACO took a five run lead in the second inning on four hits, but Johnnie Bawden, the C.N.R. hurler rose to old-time pitching heights to limit the Marines to exactly two hits and as many runs for the remainder of the game as Bawden fired his best pitching effort of the season after a shaky second frame. In the meantime the "Railroaders" had garnered in three runs in the fourth and added a brace more in the sixth to tray by two runs, when the outbreak of C.N.R. base knocks rattled off Jim Tunney's deliveries in the seventh, when the winners scored eight runs on nine solid base hits, that included singles, doubles by Langman and Wright and a second home run from "Shud" Ehler's bat. The next inning saw the verbal outbreak that ended dismount hostilities in confusion.

Marines Held to Five Hits.

The Marines collected but five hits from the offerings of Johnny Bawden and his only scoring after the second inning. Woods and Barriage counted two singles and Carson a double to garner in the bulk of the Marines' attack. In the meantime the "Railroaders" were clubbing Jim Hunter for a total of 13 base hits, nine of which came in their seventh inning rally, that gave them eight runs. Shiler banged out two circuit blows and added a single for good measure as every member of the Browning-led crowd touched Hunter for at least a base knock. Day and Langman both came through with timely C.N.R. base hits as eight of the winners hit safely in the hectic seventh inning rally that closed the piece prior to the conceding of the game to the Marines.

On Monday no doubt it will be Bill Anderson on the mound for the big line pitching against the veteran Johnny Bawden, who has pitched the C.N.R. into their present lofty O.A.S.A. spot.

Tunney Rematches Sexton and Hall For Main Bout

Not satisfied with the results of their last meeting, Promoter Frank Tunney rematched Frank Sexton, the Ohio Powerhouse and Pacific Coast wrestling champion, and Len Hall, of Hollywood and claimant to the Coast title to meet again at the headline attraction in an all-star wrestling show at the Hume Arena next Wednesday night.

"Hall still contends he was jobbed by Referee Maxwell as also says he has chased Sexton clean across the continent challenging him to the right of the Pacific Coast crown. We want to settle the question once and for all and I know of no better place to get the problem over than in the Hume Arena at Belleville," Promoter Tunney was quoted as saying yesterday as he re-signed the pair.

Frank Sexton, the Columbus adonis, claims he hasn't lost a bout in two years and only recently beat Yvonne Robert, the pride of Montreal, right in his Quebec metropolis and today is one of the most sought after grapplers in the business. However, Hall's versatility all but upset the Ohioan here the other night thus prompting Tunney in rematching the pair in what should prove the most interesting bout staged here this season. Hall is a powerful and courageous wrestler and will stoop to low levels to gain Sexton's crown.

Supporting this feature bout sees Jerry Monahan meeting Tour Morrison with the strongest preliminary of the year bringing Bob Wagner and the popular Pierre DeGlane together in the opener.

Detroit Tigers Emerge as Latest Threat to St. Louis Browns In Race for American Flag

Have Eight - Game Win Streak and Hold Third Place

BROWNS STOPPED

By JACK HAND
Associated Press Sport Writer

Detroit's hot and cold Tigers emerged as the latest "threat" to the St. Louis Browns today with an eight-game win streak giving them renewed hopes of catching the leaders.

Although the Tigers held third place by only a half-game over the Yankees, they trailed boston by only 1½ games and were coming on fast.

Detroit's two-man pitching staff of Hal Newhouser and Paul Trout, each with 16 wins, found a new partner last night in Stubby Overmire, who yielded 12 hits but chimed in with three blows on his own behalf in trimming Washington, 11-4.

New York finally stopped the Brownies' streak after 10 straight when their old jinx, Alley Donald, turned the pace-setters back with 8 hits, 6-1. Donald's 12th win of 1944 was his 12th over St. Louis in 15 tries since he hit the majors. Rollie Hemsley and Russ Derry homered.

Boston missed a chance to gain by losing to Chicago 8-7 when Clem Hausmann and Pinky Woods walked in runs to break a tie in the 9th. But Bunny Christopher scattered nine blows while the Philadelphia A's poked 13 hits off three Cleveland tossers for a 6-3 night edge.

Teddy Wilks failed to last in his first start since last Sunday's injury but Fred Schmidt came in to finish Cincinnati's 4-1 victory for the Cardinals' 9-4 win over the Phils' charley Schanz. Pittsburgh cut out seven runs in the 5th to trim New York 12-8 with reliefers Al Gerheauser declaiming Ewald Pyle.

Brooklyn belted Chicago out for the third time, 7-6, on Luis Olmo's single scoring Barney Koch in the 11th to beat Bob Chipman, while Cincinnati outslugged Boston 12-6 on 2 big innings.

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER TEN.

He discussed quite frankly breaking the Hallard trust and told of the methods he was pursuing to bring it to a legal issue. That Dr. Norwood knew all about the effort and apparently concurred in it, was apparent from the way the letter was worded. Too Much Power.

The next to the last paragraph insinuated that Dr. Norwood not only knew about it but was the instigator, and Loren Fields hinted that the president of Hallard college was holding out for too much money as his share in the trust when Fields succeeded in getting the courts to break it on a technicality.

Miss Marston could not have been more shocked if some one whom she trusted had told her that Dr. Norwood had murdered his wife and presented the evidence to prove it.

It was monstrous. The very idea made her shake as though she had a sudden chill. Not Dr. Norwood, of all people! The man whom everyone in the school idolized—the man who had always been so scrupulously honest and fair that not a breath of suspicion had ever been connected with his name.

A man so broad in his viewpoint, so tolerant and understanding that his friends were openly grooming him for high political office.

There must be some mistake. But even as she said it to herself, she knew that she was denying the evidence of her own eyes. The words were there, naked and unashamed, before her.

The only mistake was that the letter had somehow come to her instead of to the man for whom it was intended. She pressed the buzzer on her desk and Miss Fisher came in, notebook in hand.

"No, not yet. I want to know how it happens that I got a letter in my file that was addressed to Dr. Norwood. Did you open it yourself this morning?"

"Why, yes, Miss Marston. I did. I didn't think anything for Dr. Norwood in the bunch. Of course it's possible that I might have overlooked it, but I don't think so."

"Nevertheless, there is a letter here addressed to him—a letter from Mr. Fields. How could it possibly have got among mine if you didn't see it?"

Sorta Letters.

"I don't know, Miss Marston. I really don't. I'm always very careful, as the clerk who sorts the letters occasionally does make a mistake. But I always look at every envelope before I open it to be sure it's intended for our office. I look only at the envelopes myself. They are in my waste basket."

"I wish you would—at once, please."

The secretary was back in a few minutes, a stack of torn envelopes in her hands.

"I've gone over every one of them twice, and Miss Hallard helped me", she said. "All of them have your name on the outside. I was quite sure I wouldn't make such a mistake.

"I didn't think you would either", the dean said. "You're always very careful about such things. That's why I couldn't understand how I got this letter."

"Do you want me to take it across the hall to Dr. Norwood's office?"

"No—no, thank you, Miss Fisher. That will be all, now. Oh, yes, will you please put the envelopes on my desk? I'll dispose of them later."

The instant the door closed, Miss Marston went over the envelopes carefully, one by one. In the end she admitted, reluctantly, that it wasn't a Washington post-mark on any of them and that the envelopes corresponded exactly with the number of letters she had on her desk, including the one addressed to Norwood.

Shocking.

She wondered what to do with the letter, now that it was in her possession. It was so incriminating—it was so shocking that she hesitated to think what Norwood would say if she handed it to him or let him know in any way that she had read it.

Kay Roberts' words, the statement she had blurted out to her the day Jeanne Hallard had come to the College to live, came back to her unbidden.

Was it something like this that she meant? Certainly the tone of the letter this deal between Dr. Norwood and Loren Fields must have been going on for some time. It wasn't a first discussion, that is certain.

But what should she do with the letter, now that she had it? Was it her duty to take it to Mr. Tilden and Mr. Alexander, the other trustees? Should she destroy it, or find some way to slip it into Dr. Norwood's office so he would not know it had been read by an outsider?

Miss Marston's bewilderment at the position she found herself in seemed to become greater, the more she thought about it.

It was almost as though she had been reprieved right at the foot of the scaffold when Miss Fisher entered and said that Dr. Norwood wanted Miss Marston, Miss Hallard and herself to come to his office immediately.

Now was the time to get rid of the letter. It would be easy, in Dr. Harwood's office, to slip it into the pile of mail which probably was there. He need never know that she had read the letter. It would be a secret she could keep to herself.

But at the last minute instead of slipping the letter with her, she slipped it into the middle drawer of her desk. Miss Marston then put the key in the pocket of her jacket, where she could easily explain to herself why she did it. The impulse was there, and she followed it.

Outer Office.

Miss Fisher and Jeanne were waiting in the outer office and followed the dean across the hall. Kay looked up as they entered and nodded her head toward the private office.

"Go right on in", she said. "Dr. Norwood is expecting you"

Jeanne felt like a naughty child being called to the prim-pals office when she entered. Dr. Norwood was sitting forward in his chair, his eyes stern, the usual smile entirely absent from his face.

Miss Marston felt a moment of panic. Had Dr. Norwood discovered that his private letter had gone astray? That it had landed on her desk and probably been read? Was he going to demand to know how the mixup in mail occurred?

It certainly seemed that way to her. Why, otherwise, should he call not only her but the girls who worked in her office? Her face flushed as she anticipated what he might say about people who read mail that wasn't intended for them.

Dr. Norwood had a sharp tongue when the occasion came to use it. Not that he had ever used it on her, but she had heard him discipline students—of course, when they really deserved it.

"Miss Marston, young ladies", Norwood said, without preamble, "are you no doubt are wondering why I called you to my office".

"I know—I know", the dean said to herself, nervously.

"A very serious situation has arisen, the college president went on. "A situation which threatens the very reputation of this institution. It is because all three of you are directly concerned that I have called you here."

"Now it's coming" Miss Marston quaked to herself. "He's learned about the letter—he's going to hold us all responsible for something that is my responsibility alone".

Aloud, she said:—

"Dr. Norwood, I can—"

Reports.

"Just a minute, Miss Marston, if you please. Wait until I have finished. Several months ago the F.B.I. intercepted some reports of some very incriminating reports, I might add. Reports having to do with sabotage against the American war effort".

Jeanne had her moment of panic, then. Had Dr. Norwood discovered her true identity? Had he charged that she was indebted to a gang that Dr. Clyde believed might be responsible for espionage or sabotage What a fool she had been. She should have confided in Dr. Norwood—the very day she had arrived here. He had a right to know.

Now he had learned, somehow, that she was an imposter. That she was connected with people who were fighting this country and more effectively than their soldiers were combating ours on the battlefield.

She was about to speak, make a clean confession of the whole thing, when she realized that Norwood was talking again.

"These reports, I might add, were typewritten. Typewriting, as you may know, is almost as individual as handwriting. No two machines write exactly alike after they have been in service for a short time.

They take on characteristics that detectives, through their study of machines, have been able to classify almost as accurately as they do fingerprints.

Trace Letter.

"Only in the case of a typewriter, a search must be made until the one wanted is found. If detectives can trace a letter or a communication to any certain district, the process of eliminating they will eventually come to the machine on which the document was written.

"I regret to say that the typewriting papers I mentioned were written on a typewriter belonging to Hallard College." To be exact, they were written on a machine on your outer office, Miss Marston. Not the one that Miss Fisher ordinarily uses, but the extra one.

"Why—why most anyone could have used it, Dr. Norwood", Miss Marston said. "Before Miss Hallard came, students frequently dropped in to borrow the use of it when they had papers to copy or even letters to write. Now, of course, it is in Miss Hallard's charge".

"I realize that, Miss Norwood answered. "I am deeply shocked, as I say, well imagine. That such a thing could happen in this school is unthinkable. That any one of our students might be engaged in such work is unbelievable—why it's preposterous!

Jeanne breathed easier. It wasn't as she had feared—Dr. Norwood hadn't discovered that she was an imposter. After all, her self-reliant she felt was counterbalanced a moment later when she saw Miss Marston set Miss Marston was. The dean was taking the news almost as a direct accusation.

"I—I don't see how it could possibly have happened, Dr. Norwood" she was saying.

"I don't either, but it apparently did. The F.B.I. men have investigated very thoroughly. They even showed me greatly enlarged motion pictures of several pages of the documents they seized. I often an enlargement of a sample page written on that typewriter.

"The errors in the type, which stand out clearly in the enlargements, were identical. There can be no doubt but that they have found the typewriter on which the papers were copied".

Use Typewriter.

"I just happened to think, Dr. Norwood", Miss Fisher said, "that it could have been most anyone connected with the college. Not only many of the students but members of the faculty, too, have used that typewriter at various times. In these days, with the shortage of machines, an extra one is a great boon. It has been almost constantly in use by someone".

"Just what is to be done?" Miss Marston asked. She had better control or herself now. She, too, was secretly relieved even though Norwood's announcement had greatly startled her, that he didn't know about his letter which was now safely locked in her desk.

"That is up to the F.B.I., I don't know that there's anything to be done. But I thought, since you three ladies are the ones directly concerned with that typewriter, that you should know to what use it has been put.

"I must be well on my way to Washington before I get there", Dr. Norwood said.

Back in her own office, Miss Marston had scarcely sat down when there was a tap on the door and Dr. Clyde thrust his face inside.

"May I come in?" he asked, with a smile.

"Of course, Dr. Clyde, come in and sit down".

It was just passing by and thought Id drop in to pass the time of day", he explained. "What's the matter, you look worried! Some of your girls going astray with the soldiers?"

"I wish it were as simple as that. I'd know how to handle a situation of that sort".

"It sounds serious—would you care to have me share your troubles? Perhaps my advice will be helpful".

Needs Advice.

"I'll tell you, Dr. Clyde, a terrible thing has happened or is about to happen, and I have accidentally stumbled onto it, I despise myself for it but sometimes I need advice and I don't know of a better person than you to confide in. You're always so clear-headed, so calm. You've always given me excellent advice in the

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma and Puds Simkins and Gilason Mages were walking along just walking along, and Puds said, G, a party.

Meaning a lot of laughing coming out of a house and different kids running up the front steps and ringing the bell and being let in, and Gilases Mages said, Boy I wish we'd been invited.

How about going in anyways? I said. There'll be so many other kids in there, nobody'll notice if even in there, I said, and Puds said, golden. I'm game.

Sure, even if we don't get introduced to anybody we'll all know each other and we can enjoy the ice cream and cake without being lonely.

That's right, and if anybody asks us what we're doing in there we can look innocent and claim we thought it was some other party and just went in by a natural mistake, and then they'll probably be too polite to say any more about it, Gilases said.

Sounding like enough of an excuse to try it, and Puds said, Well how about it, we just sit down on the front steps and look sad, and the next time the kid's mother opens the door she'll feel you sorry for us she'll bring us out some food and cake.

Sounding worth trying just for luck, and we sat down on the steps and 2 boys came up and rang the doorbell and somebody opened the door, only it was the kid himself instead of his mother, being a little fellow with his hair brushed careful, and one boy said, Happy birthday, Sonny, and the other one said, , Who are those guys?

Meaning us, and the freckle face kid said, Oh, just some guys that wished me happy birthday.

And he shut the door again and we rang the doorbell just like lightning, having a little fun and some extra exercise and being better than nothing but not be petas ice cream and cake.

Prime Minister King Says Germany Knew In Event of Aggressive War Canada Would Not Be Neutral

Ottawa, Aug. 11 —(CP)— Germany had full knowledge that in the event of an aggressive war Canada would be in it, Prime Minister Mackenzie King said today in the House of Commons as he lifted the veil from a bit of pre-war history.

He said when he went to Germany and talked with Hitler following the coronation in 1937 he went for the purpose of making it clear to the German people that Canada would not be neutral.

At the same time looking into the future in Canadian politics, Mr. King, without naming Premier George Drew of Ontario, issued a challenge to anyone who wished to battle on whether some Canadians were to be treated differently from others.

Mr. King was replying to John Diefenbaker (PC—Lake Centre) who referred to the government's alleged pre-war attitude of aloofness to International Affairs and urged that Canadian citizenship for the future be recognized as such without any labels as to racial origin.

On the first point, Mr. King said he had nothing to take back or any stand he had represented took while he was at the head of the administration. There were some people who suggested, he said, that had Hitler known that Canada would fight there would have been no war.

Anyone who knew the German war machine and the extent to which Hitler himself was taken in by that machine knew that was not so, knew that such thinking would only spur the plan of world conquest it was concocting.

Then he told of the purpose of his visit to Germany and said Right Hon. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, had thanked him for what he had done.

Capt. D. McCrea, Tweed Army Man, Killed in Action

Captain Donald E. McCrea, well-known Tweed army officer, has been killed in action in Normandy, according to word received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. McCrea. An artillery officer, he met his death while doing forward observation work with a battery of the 5th Field Regiment, R.C.A.

Born twenty-nine years ago, he received his education in Tweed, and started in athletics in both village and educational squads. In 1938 he represented this district in the Ontario Boys' Parliament, and was re-elected a year later.

A member of the Montreal staff of Canadian-Industries Ltd., when war broke, he immediately offered his services. Rejected by the R.C.A.F., he joined a field battery in 1940, training at Petawawa, Debert and Montreal.

He earned his sergeants stripes and went overseas, returning in 1943 for officers training at the Brockville O.T.C. Awarded his commission and returned overseas in December of the same year. Prior to his departure he married Miss Dorothy Helen McCutcheon, of Cornwall. He was promoted to the rank of captain prior to leaving for France with the unit.

Captain McCrea turned to athletics during his period of training in England. He was a member of his unit softball squad. He took part in frequent track and field events held by the Canadian Army overseas.

He leaves besides his wife and parents, two sisters, Mrs. Preston Chase, Jessie Trenton, Tweed and Joan at home, and a younger brother, Ronald, at home.

The late Captain McCrea was a member of Masonic Lodge W. J. Tummon, Foxboro, and Mr. and Mrs. John Sager, Tweed.

CANADIANS IN ARMORED TRUCKS OPEN NEW DRIVE

Reds in Menacing Arc Before Borders of E. Prussia

Seven to Twelve Mile Advance Made By American Army

Germans Caught in Closing Ring, Escape Hole Only 16 Miles Wide

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 14. (CP)—Canadian infantry in armored trucks leaped forward in a new offensive and American tanks and infantry advanced seven to 12 miles today, closing for the destruction of the cream of Germany's forces in northwestern Europe. The Germans were caught in a closing ring with an escape hole less than 16 miles wide.

British, Canadian and American troops were swiftly collapsing a huge Nazi pocket, spurred by General Eisenhower's declaration that they had a fleeting opportunity to score their greatest victory in the west, a victory which might bring the fall of Paris like a ripe plum.

Canadian tanks and infantry, carried forward in tough armored track vehicles called "priests", jumped off in a major attack which gained several miles and crossed the Laison River toward Falaise, the northern jaw of the champ.

Clese Arrend Argentan.

American armored spearheads, which had swept dramatically behind the Germans from Chartres, forming the southern jaw of an Allied nut-cracker, had completely closed around Argentan.

The effect was to cut to less than 16 miles the gap through Gen. Field Marshal Marshal Gen. Von Kluge was making a sizable effort to extricate approximately 100,000 Germans—a fourth of the entire force with which the Allies have come in contact since D-Day.

The Canadian offensive got off at noon, backed by hundreds of R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. heavy and medium bombers which smashed enemy strongpoints within 3,000 yards of the Allied front lines.

The Canadians, who had been five miles north of Falaise and 1 1-2 to 2 miles north of the Laison River, got across that major barrier. Capture of Falaise, three miles south of the river, would close another German escape point, Overa Gives Detail.

Before the Canadians smashed forward from Caen, Gen. Crerar in an order of the day "we can contribute in a major degree to a speedy Allied victory by our action today." The Canucks, now battle-seasoned after last week's push down the Caen-Falaise road were urged by their commander to "strike down the enemy—first hit him hard and keep on hitting."

There was no immediate report of the number of Canadian heavy bombers working in support of the new drive, but Canadian aircrews were said to have been in great force. Terrific fire was to be used in support of their brother Canadians on the ground in a major offensive.

In a smoking cauldron, covered by a lid of thousands of Allied planes pounding the Germans in the new offensive area and pounding on every Nazi in sight throughout the corridor, the enemy fought a bitter, tangled battle to escape extermination.

Moved Down by Hundreds.

American artillery, "blasting in on the 90-mile deep pocket, found German troops moved down by hundreds." reds. The advance was so fast the infantry found the enemy's smaller artillery pieces with belts still loaded.

So confused was the enemy that remnants of six divisions were blended in one narrow three-mile front.

Greatest American advance was along the middle of the contracting claw east of Mortain where Lt.-Gen. Courtney H. Hodges won the vicinity of Domfront in a smash of six miles by noon today. Domfront is 13 miles east of Mortain.

By BILL ROSS

Canadian Press War Correspondent

Florence, Aug. 14 (CP Cable)—The central part of Florence lying north of the Arno River remained an inhabited "No Man's Land" today with Partisans mopping up snipers at a cost to date of 100 killed and 300 wounded.

Troops of the British 8th Army control the part of the town on the south bank while the Germans have positions in the western and northern outskirts, and sometimes send patrols into the city.

Despite the ceaseless sniping, civilian activities have been resumed little and a high degree of public order has been maintained. Service cars are being tuned and some 35 tons of food and medical supplies are sent daily over the Ponte Vecchio the only bridge the Germans left intact.

These supplies are received from Allied military government officials in the name of the Italian Liberation Committee who handle distribution. Yesterday bread was baked in the three reopened bakeries with flour sent into the city this way; each Florentine receiving 100 grams, which will be increased to 200 today.

The humanitarian work is sometimes interrupted not only by snipers but by prowling Germans. Saturday afternoon a German reconnaissance tank came upon the supply group near Ponte Vecchio and opened fire, wounding a British officer and killing an Italian liaison officer.

Fascist Snipers Shot.

Three Fascist snipers—one of them a woman—were discovered by Partisans yesterday, lined up against a wall in the Piazza Santa Maria Novella and unceremoniously shot in view of the crowd.

It appears certain that some dozen snipers are in the same square Saturday when similarly executed, although the leader of the Partisans gave personal assurances all but a few of the ceiling ended sniping.

Maj. R. G. Riddell of Alton, Ont., and Toronto, whose company assisted 250 Partisans to take Florence, Italian clearing in south Florence, said they were "ceaselessly careful not to mistake innocent civilians for Partisan for a Fascist."

Canadians suffered the heaviest indiscriminate use of weapons," he said. "These Italians were highly trained and having been snipers themselves when this part of Italy was occupied, they know how to ferret them out."

Canadians assisted the Partisans by providing covering fire and letting the Italians dealing with the Partisans. He was no easy task for the Canadians to differentiate.

New tricks in sniping and housecleaning were learned from the Partisans, who in platoons commanded by Lieuts. G. K. Wright, Hagersville, Ont., N. W. Wood, Longeuil, Que., H. W. Wood, Montreal, Que., Paul I. Dickson, Westmount, Que., and Leonard M. Mills, Toronto.

ALLIES HAMMER RETREATING NAZI LEGIONS IN FRANCE

Other Bomber Groups Sweep Over South Germany to Bavaria To Hit Targets

RAIL LINES STRAFED

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 14 —(AP)— Great armadas of British and American planes numbering well over 3,500 today bombed war industries in Southern Germany, marshalling stations throughout France and shipping in the great port of Brest, while harrying the Germans in their perilous retreat in Normandy.

They struck from British and Italian bases.

Up to 1,500 U. S. heavy bombers from England attacked German war industries at Mannheim and Ludwigshafen and German airfields, railroads and bridges in both Germany and France.

Another great fleet of up to 750 American fighters struck from Italy at military objectives in the south of France for the third consecutive day. They also bombed the Brest Peninsula. Italian coast again. The heavies flew without escort. The fighters separately and spent the day strafing targets in the same area which they bombed. Targets were not immediately identified.

Hammer Lines at Falaise.

Hundreds of British medium and heavy bombers hammered rail lines in the Falaise sector to pave the new Canadian offensive. A large flight of heavy Lancaster bombers earlier had bombed German shipping at the industrial port of Brest in Brittany.

Since Aug. 8 the big Lancasters have plunged 12,000 tons of bombs on submarine pens at Brest in three attacks. Fighters escorted the bombers in clear weather.

Hammering down only 2,000 yards in front of Allied troops, Mitchell and Boston bombers and fighter-bomber air force successfully attacked three German strongpoints along the north bank of the German escape corridor in Normandy. Returning crews said the bursts were very accurate and no plane was lost.

During the day, President, weather sent the tactical air forces lashing anew at Field Marshal Von Kluge's shattered divisions. Rhubarb (fighter) radio declared Allied bomber and fighter formations had swept deep into southern Germany to Bavaria and then returned to their bases unscathed.

Cloudy weather gave the German 7th Army extra protection during the night, but R.A.F. Mosquitoes and Allied medium bombers pounded road troops, tanks and transport caught far beyond the battle zone, and other Mosquitos attacked the German industrial city of Hannover. All the Marauders and Mosquitos returned.

Marauders, bombing with the aid of flares, hurled explosives on troops and ammunition stores dispersed in the forest D'Halouet, some 15 miles southeast of Falaise, where the Germans were putting up the stiffest rearguard resistance.

Straff Rail Lines.

Mosquito squadrons bombed and strafed rail lines from the battle area to Paris, and many radiating northeast from that city. Direct hits were scored on a bridge over the Seine.

The Germans probably were in for another day of shuttering attack such as yesterday's, in which Allied fighters and more than 1,500 medium bombers in all-day waves at everything moving between the battlefront and the Seine River.

The German army was in the position of a cornered animal. Its forces have been hoping for since D-Day. They have been driven to daylight withdrawal, putting all their manpower and materiel on the open road, where bombers and fighters can blast them at will without the danger of hitting Allied lines.

This situation was forecast recently by Air Chief Marshal Leigh-Mallory, who promised that once it developed his airmen would turn enemy withdrawals into a rout.

Allied Armies Create 'Definite Opportunity' For Victory--Eisenhower

Allied Supreme Headquarters Advanced Command Post in Normandy, Aug. 14.—(AP)— Allied armies have created a "definite opportunity for a major Allied victory", Gen. Eisenhower declared in an order of the day.

In a special appeal to "Allied soldiers, sailors and airmen", the Supreme Commander said Sunday:

"We can make this week a momentous one in the history of this war — a brilliant and fruitful week for us, a fateful one for the ambitions of the Nazi tyrants."

Gen. Eisenhower called for a special effort by all Allied fighters, "because the victory we can now achieve is infinitely greater than any it has so far been possible to accomplish in the west, and because this opportunity may be grasped only through the utmost in zeal, determination and speed of action. . . ."

Eisenhower's Text.

Allied soldier, sailors and airmen: "Through your unsparing efforts, skill and fortitude you have created in France a fleeting but definite opportunity for a major Allied victory, one whose realization will be measured in progress toward the final downfall of our enemy.

"In the past 8 hars, in a moment of unusual significance, made special appeals to Allied forces it has been my honor to command. Without exception the response has been unstinted and the result beyond my expectations.

"Because the victory we can now achieve is infinitely greater than any it has so far been possible to accomplish in the west and because this opportunity may be grasped only through the utmost in zeal, determination and speedy action I make my present appeal to you more urgent than ever before.

"I request every airman to make it his direct responsibility that the enemy is blasted unceasingly by day and by night and is denied safety either in flight or in flight.

"I request every sailor to make sure that no part of the Allied forces on either escape or be reinforced by sea, and that our convoys are fed from every port. Our guns and ships and ship companies can bring to them.

"I request every soldier to go forward to his assigned objective with the determination that the enemy can survive only through surrender. He can be fed no food once gained be relinquished, nor a single round of ammunition be fired once established.

"With all of us resolutely performing our special tasks, we can make this week a momentous one in the history of this war—a brilliant and fruitful week for us, a fateful one for the ambitions of the Nazi tyrants.

(Signed) Dwight D. Eisenhower.

WAR CAN BE WON WITHOUT INVASION OF JAPAN—NIMITZ

Headquarters of U.S. Fleet May Be Moved To Marianas, 1,500 Miles From Tokyo

PHILIPPINES HIT

Pearl Harbor, Aug. 14. (AP)— The fourth bombing of the Philippines in five days and new air blows north and south of Japan were portents today of a war moving west so fast that Admiral Nimitz said minutes may have to advance his headquarters to catch up with it.

Headquarters of the U.S. Pacific Ocean Fleet may be moved to the Marianas, 1,500 miles from Tokyo, he said.

The commander-in-chief of the United States Pacific Fleet, in looking for new headquarters, even has his eye on Guam, recently invaded Marianas, 3,500 miles away, within 1,500 miles of Tokyo.

He now can be disclosed that Admiral Nimitz, after conferences here with President Roosevelt and Gen. Douglas MacArthur, went to Guam and Saipan, bonanted fighting leaders there and has returned, determined "to put the hess, on at hard and fast as we can".

"I am not prepared to say now whether I will advance my headquarters to the Marianas", he said in a broadcast which boosted the airfield and a cargo ship at Chichi Jima in the Bonins, south of Japan proper, and Palrel Vessel.

Striking within less than 500 miles of northern Japan, Aleutian-based heavies sank a patrol vessel and damaged another near Paramushiro in the Kuriles Thursday.

The aerial arm swung like a giant scythe southward than 2,500 miles of Japan's inner defence wall of islands, adding a 10,000-ton freighter and a coastal vessel to the shipping disasters falling the enemy in the Malmahera-Halmahera defence zone for the Philippines.

Admiral Nimitz plotted war strategy in the Marianas with Vice Admiral Richmond Kelley Turner who is establishing a huge invasion base at Saipan. He talked with Vice-Admiral Marc A. Mitscher, who forwarded the plans for recently drove the Japanese fleet behind the Philippines, and Lieut.-General Holland M. Smith, Gen. Roy S. Geiger of the U.S. marine corps.

The Pacific commander said he did not believe any "single form of attack" would win the war.

"It will have to be a combination of many forms, including the bombardment possible hurlace ship bombardment", he said, adding pointedly:

"Already surface ships have bombarded the northern Kuriles."

Although foreseeing the possibility of Germany's collapse and invasion, to "throw in the sponge," Admiral Nimitz told reporters "we must keep in mind the possible necessity of invasion and be prepared for it."

REMOVE COLLEGE FROM POLITICS

Toronto, Aug. 14 (CP)—The Globe and Mail today said it is generally understood this weekend that the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph will not be removed from politics and placed under a Board of Governors, but that the control of the affairs of other colleges and universities, Agriculture Minister Duncan McCallum reported ill at his Cookville home, was not available immediately for comment.

NAZI GENERAL'S DEATH REPORTED

New York, Aug. 14.—(AP)—A BBC German-language broadcast heard by NBC last night reported the death of a Nazi Lt.-Gen. Fritz Bayerlein, chief of the S. S. panzer division Nordland which the broadcast said was in the Baltic area.

All-Out Russian Assault Appears To Be Coming Soon

Menace Lomza in Flanking Threat to Bastion of Warsaw

By DANIEL DE LUCE
(AP Staff Writer.)

Moscow, Aug. 14. (AP) — The zero hour at 5 a.m. all-out Soviet assault on East Prussia appeared to be approaching rapidly today as Russian armies massed in a great threatening arc before the borders of the German province.

Russian units to the south were 15 to 17 miles from the East Prussia frontier, while to the east other Soviet forces were seven to 10 miles away and to the north from 30 to 35 miles.

Red Army forces apparently striving to rip Nazi defences in East Prussia wide open from the south menaced the enemy stronghold of Lomza, vital communications centre 15 miles from embattled Warsaw with the Baltic province.

(The German announced the evacuation of Osowiec, communications centre is 15 miles south of the East Prussian frontier, and withdrawal of Nazi forces "to new centres" to the west. The German radio said strong Russian forces supported by many tanks and planes "succeeded in gaining some ground" northwest of Bialystok.

Great Tank Battles.

Great tank battles continued west of the Vistula in the Kielce region about 100 miles south of Warsaw and within 25 miles of Krakow, the last great Polish Basin containing industrial centres of German Silesia 75 miles from advanced Russian elements. The Germans were counter - attacking violently.

Almost no news came from the siege of Warsaw itself where the Germans have planted just outside the Polish capital on the eastern side of the broad and icy Vistula.

Since Friday the Russians between Warsaw and Brest Litovsk have bitten deep into German lines, captured 50 settlements and forcing three rivers, the Narew, the Upper Bug and the Biebrza, crossed in further Japan. Aleutians-based heavies sank a patrol vessel and damaged another near Paramushiro in the Kuriles Thursday.

The aerial arm swung like a giant scythe southward than 2,500 miles of Japan's inner defence wall of islands, adding a 10,000-ton freighter and a coastal vessel to the shipping disasters falling the enemy in the Malmahera-Halmahera defence zone for the Philippines.

FRENCH MAQUIS STRIKE AT REAR OF NAZI ARMIES

Move Northward from Foothills of Savoy and Southern France

HUN WITHDRAWALS

(AP Staff Writer)

Irun, Aug. 14.—(AP)—The great majority of the French Maquis forces in the Central Pleiaux region of France, in the Pyrenees region and Savoy now have moved northward to the battle line, fighting a guerilla war at the rear of the German armies along the Loire, advices from France said today.

A member of the French underground who crossed the Spanish border near here said the former Maquis strongholds in the south were deserted, and only small patrols forces remain in the Pyrenees to prevent the escape of Vichy officials.

Other French advices reported continued withdrawal of German troops southward from France, where forces near the Bay of Biscay were declared reduced to a bare handful.

This movement reputedly added confusion to the traffic situation east of Paris, where highways already were choked with retreating German troops.

Heavy explosions in the Biarritz and Bayonne area were heard in Spain yesterday. Frontier officials said the Germans were destroying last equipment they could not carry away.

All Canadian Force To Be Discussed at Security Meet

Washington, Aug. 14 (AP)— Peace-time use of an international force with its swift and deadly striking power operating at the command of a council of nations to keep the peace is to come up for discussion at forthcoming United Nations security talks in Washington.

The idea was recently been put forward in Russian quarters which, at the same time, urged restriction to the creation of any international police force such as ground troops and naval units.

Sir Alexander Cadogan, British delegate to the peace talks, told a news conference it had been talked over and agreed that use of force is one of the large subjects on which the talks will be concentrated.

Sir Alexander, meeting reporters as the British Embassy yesterday, professed frank optimism about the accomplishments of the conference opening a week from today and declined to discuss preliminary work already, been done.

As a result, he made clear, Britain and the United States are in accord on the main outlines of their world peace organization plans and Russia and China have been kept informed of the British and American proposals. Last week the Russian delegation submitted a document presumably setting forth their plans but Sir Alexander said he had not had opportunity to study it.

LIGHTLESS BIKES TAKEN BY POLICE

Complaints that local cyclists are riding city streets in groups and police the child had ran into his guidance, resulted in nine youthful cyclists being deprived of their bicycles and made walk home by police on Sunday night. In each case police found these youthful cyclists riding their bikes on city streets after dark without rear reflectors or lights of any description. Some did not even have city bicycle licences displayed. "This practice of riding bicycles after dark and not displaying a light or even a red reflector is doing nothing else but inviting trouble. Memorial Service At Christ Church For Late Rector

Life and Work of Late Rev. G. G. Wright Theme of Sermon by Rev. Rural Dean Payne

At Christ Church at the Matins on Sunday an impressive memorial service to the life and work of the late rector, the Rev. G. G. Wright, whose sudden passing last week was a shock to the members of his parish and of the people of this community, was conducted by the Rev. Rural Dean A. Beauchamp Payne, rector of St. Thomas Church, the service being one of the union services of the two congregations of Christ Church and St. Thomas' during the summer season. The hymns were chosen to express the faith in the life triumphant.

The late rector of Christ Church passed away on the day of the Feast of Transfiguration, the day of a great significance to all who believe in Christ and to Dr. Lavell. It was natural to feel a sense of poignant grief at his passing said Rev. Rural Dean Payne, speaking of the influence of the life of the late Rev. Mr. Wright, who was the author of the late rector's life and work in the congregation and community in which he was gathering at his obsequies last Wednesday he stated and it provided an occasion for a deeper sense of for the life of influence which had been his and which he had received family the sympathy and sorrow of his people.

Rev. Mr. Payne chose the words of the Apostle Paul "I have finished my course" as the appropriate words to the late rector of Christ Church, who for the last 18 years of his Church had been given a wide vision and a wide privilege. "Of his work in this parish there is no need for me to speak," said Mr. Payne. "You know it well. It was the expression of his faithful ministry and the progress which has been made here in the years of his rule."

In the rural deanery of Prince Edward, the preacher said, and in the diocese of Ontario his work was in the diocesan synod and in many committees and he had the privilege of serving on the wide council of the Church of England in Canada.

The late Rev. G. G. Wright has left behind a memorial to his devotion to the Church and to God, the fine spirit of which is in the memories of his life live in this parish, in the Church and in the community.

POLICE BLOTTER

Port Hope police reported seeing a motor car bearing Ontario licence number 22-J-2 being driven driven in a suspicious manner and leaving that town when police approached. Check-up revealed the car had been reported stolen in Belleville on Saturday by the management of the West End Motors.

Police are investigating the report of a dog having attacked and bitten Mrs. Mary Woodcock, of Foxboro, on Sunday night. When checked it was found that the vehicle had practically no braking power what-so-ever. Traffic charges are pending, police added.

Weekend inebriates found it rather costly to imbibe too freely of "wobbly water" Saturday night as apprehended and held until they were in fit condition to return safely to their respective abodes. Yes, they'll be charged with first offence intoxication tomorrow.

Wellington Youth Recovers Body From Weed Bed

Wellington, Aug. 14.—Residents of this lakeside village are speaking with pride of the latest exploit of one of its young citizens.

He is the thirteen-year-old son of Leo Vandusen and his relations' prowess was largely responsible for the recovery of the drowned body of LAC. Jim Ross, RCAF, who lost his life while swimming here two weeks ago.

While comrades of the drowned youth, and villagers dragged the deep water off the Brick Plant dock, young Vandusen dived several times in the vicinity of the spot, finally discovering and extricating the body, which had become entangled in harbor-bottom weed growths.

The grieving tragedy occurred in the same spot where some years ago the late Scout troop leader, Jimmy Cullow, gave his life in a futiless effort to save a man twice his age. A memorial cairn was erected to the memory of the heroic fifteen year-old boy scout.

Lightning Enters Cheese Factory

Wellington, Aug. 14 — Lightning, playing vividly around machinery in the Cloverdale cheese factory of Company's plant two miles east of this village, gave employees a bad time and shook several members before calling it a day.

Herbert Clemens, manager of the plant, received a rude jolt, while one of his staff was staggered by an unnerving shock. Lightning entered the building during a heavy electrical storm in the area.

Blue flashes played around vats and cheese presses and machinery was put out of work. Rubber boots worn by the men are believed to have saved, what they have been accustomed to, shocks, when the storm struck.

As if not content with its pranks in the cheese plant, lightning ripped through the Channel residence a few yards east and damaged telephone equipment.

During the same storm, the Hillier Anglican Church was struck and struck and destroyed by fire.

Blackmore Makes Suggestion About Federal Election

Ottawa, Aug. 14—(CP)—The belief that the next federal election campaign will be fought on "real differences" between the Liberal and Conservative parties—"real differences—if such differences exist — was voiced Saturday by John Blackmore, Lethbridge Social Credit Leader, in the commons.

Mr. Blackmore said the liberals and progressive conservatives should stop trying to "out pound" each other with imperial relations, and added after hearing Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader expound the view of the Progressive Conservative Party, Conservative Leader, on Canadian autonomy within the Empire, that he failed to see the difference between Mr. Bracken and Mr. King.

He also opposed opposition members to accede to Prime Minister Mackenzie King's request to pass external affairs department estimates to enable him to attend to "important duties."

Mr. Graydon said a "great many" bogeys and statements had been set up and knocked down in connection with alleged policies of the Progressive Conservative Party, but he knew of no one in Canada who seriously proposed that, regardless of Empire and Commonwealth Relationships either now or in the future, Canadian autonomy be in any way impaired, prejudiced or interfered with.

The House changed tih date for the coming into force of the war service gratuities bill from Oct. 1 to Jan. 1 next after hearing Defence Minister Ralston say it was doubtful if the machinery for paying gratuities and grants would be set up by Oct. 1.

Meandering Midas Saves Six Bucks

Meandering Midas; the bloke with the loose lexicon, who pontificates peeps off one buck if you can show him a token purchase for the draw on the $1,000 Victory Bond to be given away at the Kiwanis Kanivals on Thursday night, continues his buck-passing antics on Saturday.

Six crisp one-dollar bills changed hands and six long faces wended their way homewards to tell the wife that Lady Fortune was on vacation, or that she should not have remained in the draw office while conducting the usual post-pay-day shaking down of hard earned pants.

Among the luckless, buckless ones left resting there, George Fitzgerald, Don Fraser, Nick Panos, Don Keir and Ron Stonehouse. Each of them ducted a careful search of their shorts and found that they had not produce the needed tickets.

Smiling ten-dollar smiles, that rested there contentedly of that amount were, Joe Niblock, Vern McKnight, disposers of chickens, weather reports, papers, and advice at the Bill Cook Smoking Emporium, Guy Bradshaw, Stirling, E. Day (no relation to D-Day) Stewart Warner, E. Collins, Cecil Bell, Bill Gardiner and A. Evans, of Stephens-Adamson Company.

And so it ends. The Kiwanis Lettuce Garden is no more. All that remains is for the winner to pick up the bond on Thursday night. Meandering Midas will fade into obscurity, unless he finds out by accident that he has been left behind and will forgot to ask himself certain questions.

Hamilton, Oklahoma City, were the head yard of their home yesterday when their son, Jimmy, picked up the rifle his father had used on a recent hunting trip. He pointed it at his mother. "I'm a soldier," he said and fired.

Boche in Tight Corner in France, Allies Fight To Close Giant Trap

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

Our best summary of the bloody, decisive battle of western Europe comes from Commander-in-Chief Eisenhower's report of the day in which he tells his troops that the Germans in France have a fleeting but definite opportunity for a major Allied victory.

Eisenhower's words, "fleeting but definite", tell the whole story. Victory is within our grasp, success for granted. Great leadership and gallantry by the Allies have put us in position where, Eisenhower says, we can make the most momentous one in the history of this war." But, we won't get victory without effort. "This week" may tell the story.

Germans struggle to escape from a trap we have the Boche in a tight corner. On the Normandy-Brittany front he is engaged in a general withdrawal to the northeast, that is, towards Paris and the Seine river. Within that broad front is a cul-de-sac of death whose narrow entrance is towards Paris. Inside this trap is a large force of Germans struggling to escape.

The Allies are attacking furiously to close the mouth of their trap, which is only a few miles wide as this is written. Canadian and British troops are fighting their way through the bloody Caen sector while American armored forces are striking from Avranches.

We don't know—nobody knows—how many Germans still are within that trap, but there may be 100,000. They are being pounded by the air. They're reported to be doing this grimly and methodically with their usual efficiency and the training of what once was an almost perfect fighting machine.

Thrilling Moment of War.

Can they avoid pocketing and get away? Probably will but only time will tell how many. This great battle of which the cul-de-sac is only a part (though a very important one) is one of the thrilling moments of the war. Its outcome will mean much to the hopes of an early end of the German conflict. The whole structure of the German defense in western Europe is being vitally affected by the outcome of the battle. Eisenhower's "momentous" week.

Belly Gas Tanks For Long-Range Planes Skilfully Made by Women

By WILLIAM HOLT
(B.B.C. Press Service)

London (by mail). — Did you know that women in Britain, with paper and glue, are putting extra miles on the distances flown by U.S.A.A.F. Thunderbolts?

They're making out of paper, specially designed belly gasoline tanks, which can be jettisoned if necessary, when empty. I was in one of the factories where they're made the other day, and I was shown a letter from an American—Colonel Kenneth Collier, of the Eighth Air Force Service Command Supply Division—and I'd like to quote you part of this letter. After referring to a news story in "Stars and Stripes" of the bombing of Emden in Germany by Fortresses, protected by Thunderbolts, the American colonel says "I have a particular motive in sending copies of this paper to you, for as you read about this raid you will notice that it was made possible only by the use of 'specially designed belly gasoline tanks.' Your firm made them," he goes on to say, "to you then, and to your employees, goes much of the credit for this successful mission. Many more are planned. They will do much to smash the German Air Force, and show that the Americans can co-operate in the fullest extent with the R.A.F." The colonel asks for more output of these belly gasoline tanks. "Won't you try to do even better than your promise?" he says. 'Every tank counts—every single one. Maybe," he says, "if you would put this letter up in your works, and the story, your people would feel encouraged to make a still greater effort. I know," he says, "that they'll co-operate when they see the result of their work. We count on you," he says. "And every American will be in your debt if you give us the means to fly farther into Germany."

What are these "belly gasoline tanks." Well they're huge tanks shaped like torpedoes. When they're stood on end in the factory workshops they nearly reach to the ceiling and you couldn't get your arms around one of them. They're grooved to the edge of the wings.

Basically the tanks are made of paper and gum, or glue. They're made on the same principle as make a model on a table with paper and scissors and a bottle of gum. There have to be no blisters, no air pockets, no wrinkles, and they're to be of perfect shape, all to be smoothed and streamlined. Only the tanks are not made on tables, but on huge formers, and layer after layer is gummed each on top of the other until the required thickness and strength is built up. Beautiful streamlined things, as tough as metal, and very light—just a shell.

The factory which I visited is one of a number of factories in Britain, making these tanks. And that particular factory is run by a woman.

Edith Coutts, who is manager of the factory, first came to the firm many years ago as a junior clerk and worked her way up to a higher position. Before the war the firm made stationery and engagement diaries, and she was given a high post in the paper control department. When war came and the men were called up, Edith first replaced an assistant manager, who is now serving in the Tank Corps. Then she took over complete charge of the Jettison tank production.

Miss Coutts is a vivacious Scots woman, a high cheek boned brunette with deep set eyes which sparkle with humor. When I was talking to her about her job she said "Give me credit to me. The credit due to the managing director—hi' modern outlook."

And this modern outlook and this man, who gave her the chance to show what she could do, said to me when I talked to him "Miss Coutts is a very able type of woman. I believe that women are as good as men—or better, sometimes. I've put her in charge of the biggest thing we've ever tackled."

Miss Coutts showed me round and told me the story of how they began. It hasn't been an easy job. They had to design and make their own machinery—or what machinery is used, they've made mainly by hand—and she had to plan the various processes. The bulk of the work is done by girls and women—there are only about eight men in the place, and they do the heavier jobs.

* * *

The pressure tests on the tanks are severe. If they're not made perfectly right they'll leak like a sieve. "Sometimes," she said, "I've been at the 'Waters of Babylon' and I've felt that I could sit down and cry. But we Scots are determined people. And here in this small town where there are not any big industries to make tanks for American airmen here in Scotland touches our pride.

Some of you may be wondering why we're making these tanks out of paper. Well it's to save aluminum, and the shipping space which would be taken up if we imported the tanks or the material.

The tanks are made in three parts —body, nose and tail. The body, which is cylindrical—is rolled on a reeler, very much along the lines that paper tubes are made, only on a bigger scale. After coating with shellac inside, spigotts or baffles are fitted inside to strengthen it and to prevent the gasoline from sloshing and affecting the balance of the plane by suddenly washing to one side or one end.

The making of the nose and the tail is a much more complicated business. You can't do this by machinery. The strips of paper are cut by hand-saw, but they've got to be glued and laid on by hand.

* * *

The noses look like a lot of bee hives when they're made. The work ahep had a warm, humid atmosphere with a strong smell of glue. A larger number of girls are working at high speed in pairs, glueing the strips in layers over formers which are shaped. It's an animated scene. The glue pots are all in the centre of the shop, kept hot by gas jets and steam.

* * *

The girls I saw were Scots lassies, many of them of pronounced nordic type with blue eyes and fair hair and they were busy with their slender fingers pressing layer after layer of shaped paper on to the formers. All the seams have to overlap and form a pressure-tight joint. Afterwards they're coated inside with shellac and put on one side on what look like platterns for cog wheels, to dry them.

The tails are longer than the noses, but they're shaped more or less the same, to form the other end of the cigar-like torpedo. The girls who coat and examine the insides crack almost right inside them. You see them inside these tails almost up to their thighs. Every minute speck of material has to be cleaned out because if left in it might clog the flow of fuel and prove fatal to the airmen in battle. They're glued together with a special kind of cement which has a terrific sticking power. They told me about one worker who got his fingers stuck together and it was a medical problem how to separate them. He was off his work for nearly three months.

After the insides have been thoroughly treated, inspected and finished, they're cemented together and fixed in clamps until they are set.

The factory uses trucks made mainly of paper tubes to move the tanks about. They are very light and the girls are able to push them about the place quite easily.

Girls give the tanks their pressure test. Six pound pressure per square inch is forced into them and maintained for at least twenty minutes. If there are any leaks—any or defects they are discovered here and the tank is rejected.

Then the perfect tanks are pushed along on the paper trollies into a paint shop where they're given their final coats of aluminum paint and marked with red bands where they are to be fixed to the wings of the planes. The number of each tank is pencilled on.

As the finished tanks are wheeled along to the packing department they look very streamlined and beautiful, a very pleasant sight or as Miss Coutts put it "Bonnie things."

* * *

All the girls and women who work there have been selected by Miss Coutts. She takes a keen personal interest in them. "It's the type of girl, not the age, that matters," she said. "We've got to pick them for the different jobs and what we like is a sense of eagerness," she said.

She told me about visits she'd "We act. We do the job, that's the main thing."

I tried to find out where she'd got her education. Well, the standard of education in Scotland is pretty high everywhere. But Miss Coutts has done a lot to supplement this as far as her own life is concerned. She used to attend classes at night, run by the Workers' Educational Association. She used to attend university lectures at night after she'd finished her work, and in this way she's been able to get an all round cultural education. She is widely read and has a good knowledge of world affairs. It was a great pleasure to talk to her.

But the secret of her success is a natural flair for handling human beings. And this flair has certainly produced results, at that factory where women are making it possible for the Allied Air Forces to penetrate deeper into Germany and destroy the enemy air forces in preparation for the invasion which will smash up the Nazi power forever.

Fire Destroys Hillier Church, Bolt Hits Steeple

Christ Church, Hillier, one of Prince Edward County's famous landmarks, was completely destroyed by fire, after being struck by lightning during the severe electrical storm that swept the county on Saturday morning. All the contents, with the exception of the organ were saved.

The Anglican edifice, situated 11½ miles west of the small village, was to have marked its 100th anniversary next year. Plans had already been laid for the celebration of the centennial.

The bolt ripped through the steeple at approximately 11 a.m. and the dry frame structure quickly caught fire, despite the fact, that rain was falling.

The roof quickly ignited and flames spread rapidly. Wellington volunteer fire brigades raced the six miles to the burning building. A Mountain View chemical apparatus was also brought to the scene, but structure was a flaming mass at the time of their arrival, and efforts to subdue the fire were futile.

Helpless to Reach Blaze.

Lack of ladder equipment handicapped firefighters. Nearby residents and villagers of both Wellington and Hillier rushed to assist, but were helpless to reach the blaze that started in the steeple of the church. However, they quickly organized, and succeeded in salvaging the movable contents.

Lightning ripped the steeple in a similar storm thirty years ago, but the building failed to ignite.

Plans for re-establishing the church were discussed by wardens, but nothing definite has been decided as yet. Scarcity and quality of construction material at the present time, may postpone reconstruction until after the war, it was felt.

An old American nursery around surrounds the now smouldering ashes of the venerable building. Many well-known county and district people were laid to rest there.

The church was in the Wellington parish, of which the Rev. E. N. Grant, Wellington is the rector

Research transformed Cast Iron

ALTHOUGH IT HAD BEEN PROVED by laboratory experiments that the quality of cast iron could be vastly improved by the addition of Nickel, it remained for the Canadian Nickel industry to lead the way in putting this knowledge to commercial use.

In 1921 Nickel investigators began intensive laboratory research on cast iron. They reviewed previous experiments carried on by other scientists. They made countless experiments of their own. They proved that cast iron could be made stronger, more uniform in texture and more resistant to corrosion and wear by adding Nickel. They sent out this information to buyers of castings. They instructed foundries how to use Nickel to get best results.

So Nickel alloy iron was adopted for scores of new uses. Another new market for Nickel had been developed to take the place of war markets wiped out in 1918.

Today Canadian Nickel is again diverted to war purposes, and again the industry looks to the future with confidence. Plans are ready to develop and expand old and new peacetime markets, so that the Nickel industry may continue, through its own initiative and enterprise, to make still greater contributions to Canada's welfare.

DIFFERENCE IN WARTIME

Those who walked or drove the streets of Belleville before the days of the war and walk and drive today realize how much greater is the number of people on the streets, the increase being among pedestrians. It is true that the wartime restrictions on gasoline and rubber tires and other, measures for the introduction of the war effort is saving fuel, and metal, and money for investment in war loans and in savings certificates, have reduced the amount of motor traffic, though a great deal of motoring still circulates about the city streets because of short distances and there are more people on the streets, because they walk and because there are more people living in the city because of wartime industry.

Those who drive are more watchful as there are more children of the age likely to be on the streets, especially in summertime. The times are marked by greater hurry by pedestrians, another factor which the motorist has to regard as indicating that he should drive with greater care to prevent accidents. This the motoring public generally is doing.

Children today are, fortunately, more and more conscious of the dangers of motor traffic and guard themselves accordingly by obeying the rules and thereby helping to make safer, another factor this co-operation of the children and pedestrian public. Children have become motor-conscious.

The motorist is on the lookout for any child who in the exuberance of the spirit of childhood and the bounding energy of boyhood or girlhood should neglect to take caution when crossing the roads by dashing in front of cars. Modern car equipment and alert and watchful drivers therefore prevent many accidents.

BERLIN SYMBOL OF AGGRESSION

In this worldwide war thousands of cities, town, villages and even hamlets and settlements have been mentioned in the news. Capitals of many countries date back for into the past and show in their own local history a view of the world march of progress. There is Rome for instance, and there are the hundreds of famous place names in Italy, there are the ancient cities of the Middle East, some of these names being older than the history of the lands in which they are situated. There are the thousands of communities in Russia and in Middle Europe, there are London and other spots in England, and in Scotland, there are Paris and the names long famous in French history, there are the cities of The Netherlands and Belgium and the old cities and towns of the Scandinavian countries and the Baltic States.

But there is one name that is not old, a city that is not old, it is Hitler's destroyed city of Berlin, the seat of Prussia and of the Germany empire of Bismarck, one of the great cities of Europe industrially and commercially, but a city in no way historic. The nucleus of Berlin lay in the two small towns on the Kolln and Berlin arms of the Spree River. Here Frederick II built a castle and John made it a court of the Brandenburg Electors. Berlin, however, owes its development principally to the formation of the German Empire and so has been virtually an outcome of German imperialism, which has cost the world much through the selfishness and aggrandizement of Germany.

There is attached to old cities which have been historic a great deal of sentiment, religious, national, and historic, but none of this clings to Berlin, which today bears the marks of Hitler and other aggressors. No sentiment would stand in the way of its destruction. War's effect has through the Allied raids played havoc with Berlin and much of it is in ruins.

It has been suggested the city should be wiped off the map, left utterly desolate. Sir Archibald Hurd says it should be swept away because it is the symbol of Prussian plotting and aggression. Others would have it left in ruins until Germans have been taught to see in it the fate of aggression and militarism.

If Berlin were to be left a mark of destruction, there would not be a voice raised to save it, for Berlin lacks everything that makes for greatness. It has no associations with any events of world value, it has given birth to no great men in any field of effort, art, music, letters, science. Rather it is a bureau of militarism and plotting.

Stratford Beacon Herald remarks that Berlin is known only as a city of infamous plotting, and infamous deeds against civilization. It is there that this war was hatched and from it have "gone the orders that resulted in the murder of millions of civilians by deliberate starvation, by machine-guns, by gas chambers, steam pipes and gallows."

The world treasures the names of such hallowed little places as Lidice, left desolate and in ruins, its inhabitants slaughtered in a Nazi effort to make a Nazi world built on murder, rapine and lies.

Berlin should be a by-word and even Germans should come to shiver and tremble whenever they think of it.. Another name that will be forever a word of scorn is the name of the German Fuehrer along with the names of the rest of his gang.

WATERING THE LAWN

(Windsor Star)

Of course, the way to water the lawn is to be quite businesslike and go about the job as though sprinkling the grass would be the last thing you would ever do. You grumble out the hose, grasp it firmly and hang on, while the water goes here, there and everywhere.

But, there are other ways to water the lawn. There is the more comfortable rocking chair method. All you do is take a rocker down to the parched spot, then you hold the hose with one hand, read the late sports edition with the other, and check over the passers-by.

Or you can sit on the front porch and have the small boy bring the hose to you. Then, as you admire your estate from the front steps, you can water away to your heart's content. The range can be altered by moving the armchair.

Best of all, you can appear in the shop or office next morning and tell about how dry it has been, how lawn would be all burned up, if it had not been for the sprinkling you gave it. You may be all wet, but it's fun.

BEEF FOR BRITONS

Beef-loving, beef-rationed Britain recently made a deal to take all the Canadian beef that Canada can ship overseas in 1944 and 1945, says Time. Canada will finance a large part of the cost out of her own version of lend-lease (mutual aid). The Dominion was glad to do so, for the deal was a good thing for both countries. British beef-eaters were assured of at least 100,000,000 pounds.

For Canadian farmers, the deal opened the prospect of a fine post-war market. If Canadian beef can please the British palate, post-war shipments can be delivered in ten days or less. Such express shipments need only be chilled, not frozen. Canadian beef could command a fresh-meat premium price over Argentina's frozen product..

A British market for Canadian beef and bacon would help keep Canadian post-war agriculture diversified, reduce Canadian farmers' dependence on such vulnerable crops as wheat.

NAZI JOKES CEASE

(News of Norway)

A Norwegian who has just arrived in England from his homeland reports that humorous anecdotes about Germans and gatherings are no longer as common in Norway as they once were.

It is comparatively seldom now that one hears jokes or wisecracks about the Nazi personalities or occupation in general. This does not mean the people are losing heart, said the man. Rather it is an indication of a new seriousness that has gripped the popular mind as the day of complete victory draws nearer.

And friendly smiles and gentle ways
Which lessen prejudice and strife.

To favor famous, rich or strong,
But always measured to a measured span,
Each day the same for every man.

When all must pour life's sorrows out,
And in that frenzied hour depend

Pyle in Normandy:
Troops Display Great Fortitude Despite Bombing by Own Planes

(By ERNIE PYLE)

IN NORMANDY (By wireless)—With our own personal danger past, our historic bombardment of the German lines holding us in the Normandy beachhead again became a captivating spectacle to watch.

By now it was definite that the great waves of four-motored planes were dropping their deadly loads exactly in the right place.

And by now the fighting fighters, flying like a pair of doves, patrolling back and forth, back and forth, just in front of each oncoming wave of bombers, as if to shout to them by their mere presence that here was not the place to drop—wait a few seconds, wait a few more seconds.

And then we could see a flutter come out of the belly of one plane in each flight, just after they had passed over our heads.

The flare shot forward, leaving smoke behind it in a vivid line, and then began a graceful, downward curve that was one of the most beautiful things I've ever seen.

It was like an invisible crayon drawing a rapid line across the canvas of the sky, saying in gesture for all to see: "Here! Here is where to drop. Follow me."

And each succeeding flight of bombers, as they obeyed, would turn dropped its own hurtling marker across the illimitable heaven to mark its target.

Long before now the German ack-ack guns had gone out of existence. We had counted three of our big planes down in quick succession, and I believe that was all. The German ack-ack gunners either took to their holes or were annihilated.

How many waves of heavy bombers we put over I have no idea. I had counted well beyond 400 planes when my personal distraction obliterated any capacity or desire to count.

I only know that 400 was just the beginning. There were supposed to be 1,000 planes that day, and I believe it was announced later that there were more than 3,000.

It seemed incredible to me that any German could come out of the bombardment with his sanity. When it was over even I was partially in a shattered state. I had experienced before, for just being alive.

• •

I thought an attack by our troops was impossible now, for it is an unnerving thing to be bombed by your own planes.

During the bad part a colonel I had known a long time was walking up and down behind the farmhouse, snapping his fingers and saying over and over to himself, "goddamn, goddamit!"

As he passed me once he stopped and stared and said, "goddamn it!"

And I said, "There can't be any attack now, can there?" And he said "No," and began walking again, snapping his fingers and cursing in the name of God and throwing rocks at the ground.

The big bombardment of the battalion was to spearhead the attack 40 minutes after our heavy bombing ceased. But we were to have been hit directly by our bombs. Their casualties, including dazed, from shock, were heavy. Men went to pieces and had to be taken back. The company was shattered and shaken.

And yet Company B attacked — and on time, to the minute! They attacked, they moved. The men we sent word back that they had advanced into the very midst of enemy territory and were still going. Around our farmyard, men still numb and deafened, were almost wept when the word came over the radio that the "lost" company soldier can be majestic when he needs to be.

• •

There is one more thing I want to say before I follow the ground troops on deeper into France in this report. That is the astonishing about now for days.

The Air Force in England that night other men—bomber crews—almost wept, and maybe they did. I don't know. I only wonder that they had killed off our own American boys in such numbers, and on this to them. The chaos and the carelessness that had resulted in the between the hedgerows that afternoon have passed. After the bitterness came the overwhelming remorse that the Air Corps is the sensitive arm of the Army. Not only at the beginning, but ceaselessly and everlastingly, every moment of the faintest daylight, the Air Corps is up there banging away ahead of us.

Anybody makes mistakes. The generals among them last the hardest as we do. The smoke and confusion of battle obscures from the ground as well as in the air. And in this case the percentage of error was same in the bombardment with the colossal storm of bombs that fell right among us.

The Air Corps has been wonderful throughout this campaign, and the men on the ground appreciate it.

Canadians Help Sink Six Ships Off French Coast

London, Aug. 14. (CP)—British, Canadian and Polish warships sank or damaged at least six German supply ships off the coast of the French coast Saturday in a series of engagements ranging from Le Havre, in the Channel, to the Bay of Biscay, the Admiralty announced today.

There were no Allied losses or casualties, the announcement said.

Four of the enemy ships were sunk by long range gunfire of the 1st.-Cmdr. J. D. Birch of H.M.C.S. Ottawa, Ajax and Orwell engaged three enemy armed trawlers and a supply ship off Cape Pinbarron and sank them all to the bottom.

Other Canadian destroyers engaged in the action were Captain (Acting) Cmdr. (L.-Cmdr.) R. P. Welland, D.S.C., and Lieutenant-Cmdr. P. F. X. Russell), and Restigouche (Lt.-Cmdr. J. H. Stubbs).

The skirmish took place before dawn Saturday and later in the afternoon the ships were under command of Capt. E. G. A. Clifford, in command of the 1st cruiser squadron, a medium-sized armed merchant ship was sunk off Rochelle in the Bay of Biscay.

The ship previously had been sighted by Allied aircraft of the R.A.F. Coastal Command and the positions were given to surface forces, which shelled the vessel and set it afire. She was sunk finally by a torpedo from the Polish destroyer Piorun.

Off Le Havre a fifth of M.T.B.'s encountered an enemy auxiliary vessel escorted by two R-boats and pressed home an attack despite heavy enemy gunfire. Two large explosions were heard and it was considered the auxiliary vessel had been hit, although smoke and the glare of gunflashes made it impossible to say what damage had been inflicted.

Far the St'Appelle it was the second successful Channel action, but the first for the other Canadian ships, all of which are veterans of the North Atlantic convoy route. They now are being employed to block any German attempt at a sea evacuation from France.

Penalty: Two Years or $1,000

Two hundred sixty-nine people per thousand in all sections of this country, rural, urban, metropolitan, think enough of their teeth to visit a dentist in the course of a year, according to a survey made by the U.S. Public Health Service. Those 269 persons who visit the dentist are apparently not impelled to do so by superior intelligence or wise comprehension of the vital importance of saving their teeth. That is painfully evident in the facts elicited by the survey. For each of the 269 persons in this cross section of the entire population in the course of a year there were 477 fillings, 286 extractions, 18 bridges, 17 crowns, 12 plates and—

Think of it—only slightly more than one in each ten visits made these benighted states has his or her teeth properly cleaned in a year. This burns me up when I think of all the childish moers others dentists have levelled at me for my teaching that brushing does not save the teeth. It is only to keep your teeth clean you simply must have them cleaned, scaled and polished at least once a year. By your dentist, that is the only alternative—exclude from your diet all denatured pap — refined white sugar, refined white sugar, and the thousand and one sissy items that go therefrom. Do and you'll require a pretty rugged character.

No longer is any boy or girl with teeth (most of 'em are mine, some of them were, till I paid the last installment, my dentist's) and the more I see of the sad consequences of both of loss of teeth and of dentistry in my conviction that for every tooth lost and every cavity filled or placed by a functionally efficient dentist there must definitely be added life expectancy from one to two years. On that basis I am prepared, with a fourth a thousand dollars.

It is a source of endless wonderment why so many, many, many people with a fair common school or high school education and people who can apparently afford the necessities and some of the luxuries of life, seem content to limp along for the few short years remaining to them, with only a mouth or half a dozen or more teeth missing. Worse still, many of them seem to think that if only back teeth are missing they can conceal their crippled state by the way they hold their mouths.

Questions and Answers

No, No, Sidney

My husband thinks I should lose about eight pounds... How should I go about it? I am 28, 63 1-2 inches in height and I weight 121 pounds. (Mrs. R.G.)

Answer—You might well carry 8 pounds more. Perhaps it is not worth while but the way you could it, due to flabbiness from insufficient daily exercise. Send ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope for "The Last Brady Hymn-and-Thigh Chart" follow the exercises directed. Or walk, say, five miles a day practicing good posture as you go.

Following your booklet "Rules for Reducing" I have lost 26 pounds in the last six months (from 300 to 174). I am now too large only around the hips and thighs. Would like exercises to reduce hips and thighs. (Mrs. B. H. J.)

Answer—Exercise is not the way to reduce pads of fat. Abdominal and gluteal exercise is always necessary as part of a rational reducing regime, but only to maintain tone and incidentally to prevent sagging. Shakedown and sagging. What you need to correct the uneven distribution of fat is ductless gland treatment by your physician, along with your present diet. Have you read "Rules for Reducing" (or recent — enclose 26 cents) and stamped self addressed envelope—a clipping of this item will suffice. Readers should understand that in handling thousands or letters we may easily overlook just such a clipping may become separated from the letter. Please ask in writing for what you want.

Processed.

My husband will not knowingly eat so-called "processed" cheese, such as contains coloring matter, things other than cheese and becomes as hard as concrete—oh, standing a while, is fit for human consumption. (Mrs. F. M. J.)

Answer—Evidently your indulgent Uncle Sam permits sale of the stuff you describe as it not actual claim that it is cheese. Personally I like some of the kinds cheese until real cheese becomes available. (Copyright 1944, John F. Dille Co.)

SMITHFIELD HAMS.

It is a common mistake to suppose that Smithfield ham got its name from the famous Smithfield market in London, England.

This product was developed in the Southern part of the United States and reached its greatest fame in and around Smithfield, Virginia, from which it received its name.

Although there are several recipes for producing Smithfield hams, they are all based on a strong, dry, salt cure.

After being cured the hams are hung in a long smokehouse, often lasting ten or 15 days, which is in contrast to the 20 or 30 hours' smoke at a high temperature given to ordinary commercial hams.

The hams are then covered with pepper, generally bagged, and hung in unrefrigerated storage for about a year.

During this storage or ripening period the hams develop a peculiarly characteristic flavor that sometimes described as "cheesy".

It is this pungent flavor that constitutes the chief difference between these and other hams.

Smithfield hams of the best quality are traditionally those fattened on peanuts, although this is not always true.

In 1939 William Denissen, a representative of Swift & Co., made the following observation at a restaurant men's dinner in Washington, D.C. Smithfield ham in Virginia ham, but not all Virginia ham is Smithfield ham. I am in favor of prohibiting restaurateurs from describing Smithfield ham in their menus when what they are serving is ham that is not from the region in curing sheds of Smithfield, Virginia."

A ham generally weighs about seven percent of the weight of the hog. Occasionally there are hams that weigh as much as 100 pounds.

What The Kiwanis Club Means to The City of Belleville and District

G. H. GRIFFIN
FIRST PRESIDENT, 1933

J. E. McVEIGH
PRESIDENT, 1944

C. BARAGAR
PAST DIST. LT.-GOVERNOR
PAST PRESIDENT

An Outline of Local Kiwanis Activities!

BLOOD DONORS CLINIC Through the efforts of the Belleville Kiwanis Club and with your support a very important contribution has been made to our fighting men insomuch as the Kiwanis Centre houses the Red Cross Blood Donors' Clinic! The Club pays all expenses incidental to the building and services and it is a great credit to the people of Belleville and adjoining area that since its inception some 20,000 contributions of blood have been made through the facilities provided.

AGRICULTURE The Kiwanis Club have for several years encouraged the raising of poultry in this district. During the past seven years we have given the children in rural schools 16,850 chicks and starter food. At the end of each poultry raising year special awards are made to the participants, based on results obtained in successful poultry raising. This activity has received the encouragement and approbation of the Ontario Inspector of Agriculture for this area. Through this activity a marked improvement in the grade and quality of poultry being marketed has been noted.

An indication of the esteem in which our rural friends hold the Belleville Kiwanis Club has been shown by their interest and support of the Club Calf Project inaugurated this year. A number of district farmers have placed at the disposal of our club 32 registered calves. In addition to registration of the same, they are raising them until fall when a sale will be held. The proceeds obtained will go to the furtherance of Kiwanis activities.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS AND WELFARE A tribute to the sincerity in Kiwanis work might now be mentioned. One of the highest paid civilian executive officials of the Trenton R.C.A.F. Station acknowledges his happiness and success to the efforts of Kiwanis Club of Belleville. He was a victim of Poliomyelitis in 1926 and was the recipient of Kiwanis sponsorship during the ensuing recovery years. Many families received assistance during the depression years and our doctor members performed many major operations gratis for needy people of the community, and for this they deserve our highest praise.

BOYS AND GIRLS WORK In 1935 our club undertook the installation and equipping of two children's playgrounds, located on the East and West sides of the city. Countless happy hours have been spent by the youth of our city in these grounds. The buildings are equipped with showers and fountains and playgrounds are provided with swings, slides, etc. This enterprise cost the club $8,000. These grounds are now under the supervision and control of the Board of Education and Y.M.C.A. Our club has always concerned itself in the main with child welfare work. Reference may be made to the Kiwanis sponsorship of underprivileged children at Y.M.C.A. Summer Camp. Our keen interest in youth activities is indicated by our association and support of V.O.N., Cubs, Boy Scouts, and Sea Cadets groups in the city. The new camp site at Roblin Lake, through the generosity of Kiwanian George Wallbridge, provides our club with an opportunity of expanding its youth service work. With the continuing financial support of the good citizens of Belleville and vicinity it is our ambition to provide a really outstanding summer camp suitably equipped to provide a real holiday under most healthful conditions for the underprivileged children of our community.

GENERAL ACTIVITIES The Kiwanis Club sponsors the V.O.N. in Belleville, purchased a new car, paid part of the salary of the nurse, and provided a home for the Order to carry on its clinical work. The Boy Scouts and Cubs movement was given support in 1924 and has since been a pride to the members and citizens of Belleville. The club sponsors Ki-Y hockey and softball, co-operating with the Y.M.C.A. in this important field of youthful sports activity. 240 pupils and teachers of the O.S.D. were guests of the Club at the No. 5 I.T.S. Station, now soon to be converted back to its original purpose as the Ontario School for the Deaf. They enjoyed a delicious picnic lunch at the expense of the club, and a special sports program was put on by the personnel of the station.

MEMBERS ACTIVE Our club gave precedence over other activities to assisting in the war effort, and with our organization of professional and executive ability we are able to assist in the formation of all Victory Loan sales, War Stamp sales, Red Cross Drive, Y.M.C.A., promotion work, Salvation Army Work, Knights of Columbus, Red Triangle Club and entertainment of the R.C.A.F. men from the five adjacent stations within ten miles of our city. In no case did these campaigns fail to entertain or raise the necessary funds. Among our membership we find Aldermen of the City Council, members of the Board of Education, the Sea Cadets, Chamber of Commerce, Y.M.C.A. Board, Library Board, Public Utilities Commission, and members of the various boards of the Churches in the city. They are all ready to assist in all good and worthy causes for the betterment of the community in which we live.

MONEY RAISING EVENTS Our club has sponsored theatre shows, skating carnivals, wrestling matches, dances, Sims Greater Shows, Chicken Bingo, and a Victory Jamboree with a major three-day street Carnival during the season. The funds raised each year would be approximately $5,000.00 and this sum forms the budget amount disbursement for the following year. Barring emergencies, the Club operates within this budget. The Secretary-Treasurer keeps a complete set of books and a financial statement is taken off monthly and presented to the Board of Directors at each monthly meeting. The Welfare transactions are kept separately from the current or club operating accounts and all records are audited monthly.

Our Motto:

"TO ENCOURAGE THE DAILY LIVING OF THE GOLDEN RULE IN ALL HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS"

BELLEVILLE'S OWN KIWANIS CENTRE

Building Being Adopted More and More For Various Public Welfare Organizations . . . . .

Since the Kiwanis Centre on E. Dundas St. was established in 1942, a multitude of activities has been incorporated in the building, chief of which has been the Blood Donors Clinic. All of these activities require funds and that is why the Kiwanis Club is appealing to the citizens and residents of the district to support the forthcoming Kiwanis Karnival.

The V.O.N., one of the first sponsored projects of the Kiwanis Club, has its clinics at the Centre and this organization has done an untold amount of good in the community. No one need be without medical care. All that is needed is a call to headquarters at the City Hall and a V.O.N. nurse will be on her way. The work with children has been a feature and each week a clinic is held where mothers can bring their children and have a thorough checkup.

When the war started an Auxiliary War Service Committee was formed within the Kiwanis Club and regularly this committee meets at the Centre to map out plans for the furtherance of the war effort. The Dimes for Victory campaign was inaugurated by this committee and needed funds have been raised. The building is also used for the packing of magazines and books for the armed services, the Navy and the Air Force and literally thousands of these articles have been bundled and sent on their way.

Boy Scout and Brownie groups meet regularly at this centre and by their occupation with things worthwhile juvenile delinquency is greatly reduced within the city. No charge is made for the use of the building but still funds must be provided for the upkeep and thus the Kiwanis Club is appealing for your help.

Naturally the Blood Donors Clinic is the chief use made of the building and the work accomplished is in a large measure due to the many voluntary workers, who assist, and the donations made by various individuals and business concerns in the city.

Donors come from as far west as Brighton and from Marmora, Deloro, Madoc and Tweed in the north, Wellington, Picton and Bloomfield in the south and as far east as Deseronto.

Besides the civilian donors, the Air Force has contributed greatly to the blood bank at Kiwanis Centre. These boys, who are also giving their lives so that freedom might live, realize the need for blood plasma and are willing in their off hours of leisure to come down to the Clinic and donate their blood that others might live. The residents of the district have made a distinct contribution to the blood bank but the residents of this city have not, per capita, given their fair share. The Blood Donors committee will make, in the near future, a concerted drive to have more citizens register at the Clinic.

In all the Kiwanis Centre has made a real contribution to the war effort but it takes money to run this large establishment. The Kiwanis Club, through the kindness of Lt.-Col. P. H. Wills, has come into possession of this centre and only through your contributions to the Kiwanis Karnival can money be secured to continue this worthwhile work. The money donated is being wisely and judiciously spent and much good has resulted from the efforts of the Kiwanis Club at this Centre.

COL. P. H. WILLS AFTER MAKING THE FIRST VOLUNTARY DONATION AT THE KIWANIS CENTRE.

GIFTS TO THE CLUB

THE KIWANIS CLUB HAS RECEIVED SOME VERY THOUGHTFUL AND MUCH APPRECIATED ASSISTANCE IN RECENT YEARS IN THE FORM OF SPECIAL GIFTS. THE $5,000.00 PURCHASE BY COL. P. H. WILLS, OF THE PRESENT SITE AND BUILDING OF THE KIWANIS CENTRE. THE $9,000.00 BEQUEST BY THE LATE MABEL DUFORT FRY, WHICH WAS PROVIDED FOR IN HER WILL, BEING THE RESIDUE OF HER ESTATE. THIS WILL EVENTUALLY BECOME THE PROPERTY OF KIWANIS TO BE USED TO CARRY ON THEIR WORK. THE MOST RECENT SUBSTANTIAL GIFT TO THE CLUB WAS THE SPLENDID CAMP SITE OF 18½ ACRES, WITH THE BEAUTIFUL OLD ROBLIN HOMESTEAD AT AMELIASBURG, DONATED BY KIWANIAN GEORGE WALLBRIDGE, TO BE USED AS A BOYS' AND GIRLS' SUMMER CAMP. THIS WILL BE ONE OF THE CLUB'S LARGEST UNDERTAKINGS TO DATE, AND THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF THE PUBLIC IS NEEDED TO FINANCE THE NECESSARY RENOVATION WORK AND FURNISHING OF THIS MUCH NEEDED SUMMER VACATION RESORT FOR UNDER-PRIVILEGED YOUTH.

The rooms were charmingly decorated with a profusion of summer flowers. The guest of honor was presented with a large basket gully decorated with coarse crepe paper filled with a variety of lovely gifts. Miss Arbuckle made a gracious speech of appreciation thanking her hostess and friends for their gifts and the good wishes they conveyed. At the close of the evening refreshments were served. The tea table arranged with batchelor buttons in tones of pink and blue and flower vases, was presided over by Mrs. C. Shelden of London, Ontario, while Mrs. Fred Symons and Miss Hanna Harrison, assisted in serving.

Women's Activities

AVONDALE NEIGHBORS' AID

The August picnic meeting of the above group was held at the home of Mrs. Whitmer, Trent River Road. The meeting was held on the lawn and with rain in the wakers edge and all enjoyed the cool breeze from the bay. Mrs. Elvidge, president, opened the meeting, and welcomed several visitors. Reports were read, also a letter from Stewart Button, in Italy, thanking the ladies for the gift of cigarettes.

It was decided to send $25 to the Red Cross, for the Prisoners of War Fund. Arrangements were made for a tea to be held in October, also for a bazaar later in November. Mrs. Denyes offered her home for the next meeting. The meeting closed with the Minpah.

The tables centered around the table on the lawn and thoroughly enjoyed a lovely picnic lunch the which each member had contributed. All extended thanks to the hostess for a very enjoyable afternoon.

CARMEL W.M.S.

The August meeting of the W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. Harry Dafoe on the lovely shaded lawn where a quilt was quilted. The devotional was conducted by Mrs. Noman. Minutes were read by Mrs. O. A Beneficial Treatment To Correct Enlarged Pores

Marguerite Chapman has a lovely skin.

By HELEN FOLLETT

ENLARGED pores drive some of our good looks students frantic. They fancy that the facial covering looks like an old pin cushion, all full of dents. They do a lot of lamenting about it. Well, they may. What every girl wants is a skin of fine texture, smooth of surface, pleasing of coloring.

Just what causes the pores to expand is not definitely known. Some specialists say the condition is due to too much fat in the diet; they advise the victim to cut down on rich pastries; that's a good idea in any case. We need a certain amount of sweets to chug up energy, but the amount should be low.

Use of Astringent

When the cutaneous covering is coarse, a cold rinsing should follow every soapy face washing, say experts, applied immediately afterward, patted on with pledgets of cotton, allowed to dry. It is wise to avoid creamy cosmetics for awhile. If they must be used because of roughness of the skin surface or sunburn, they should be removed within the hour.

Stimulation of the blood stream is necessary because they make for a normal condition. When using cold water, use the flesh briskly. Use the fingers as if they were little hammers.

Daily Bath.

Believe it or not, but the daily bath with plenty of friction, with soap suds and a heavy brush will help plenty of facial complexion. There is a reason. The skin is an organ of elimination. The sun rays carries dead skin cells the functioning of the skin does not go on in normal ways.

Soak in warm water for five minutes. Cover the bristles of the brush with soap, go at yourself as if you were dusting the furniture. Rinse with cool water lilies will help a family cool off these sweltering August days.

Vinegar added to the water in the pressure cooker when canning will keep the metal interior shining and bright, say experts. Try it experts say. Two tablespoons will do the trick.

Rag Washers: Tap the egg beater on your hand to loosen every last little bit of egg fluff when you are cooking. Banging it on the bowl's edge knocks out the air you've been working to put in.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

What Shall She Call Her Husband's Mother?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My husband's mother whom I never knew until a little over a year ago has asked me to call her "Mama," which I am unable to do her. I always called my own mother that, and I don't like the idea of giving the same name to someone else, especially as my mother died a little before my marriage.

I've called her Mrs. —— and she seems to resent that, and so does my husband. I don't want to become too friendly with my husband's mother who is not objectionable but I think it's wise not to get too chummy with my in-laws. What do you think about it?

Lieutenant's Wife.

For a bride to assume a barricaded attitude toward her in-laws seems a mistaken policy. You need not become intimate but there is a difference between that and a pleasant friendly recognition of one's husband's kith and kin. Please don't carry your standoffish policy too far.

Doesn't Do For a Man to Be Too A-Wooing.

Fighting in Normandy the past few weeks has with the turning back of certain pages of history, immortalized an age-old truth that it doesn't pay for a courting man to be too meek.

As a monument to this self-evident truth—meekness in a lover doesn't pay—almost everything in the town of Caen was destroyed with the exception of that famous Abbey of St. Stephen, where have reposed the bones of William the Conqueror for a thousand years.

This fine building of Romanesque land grew tired of courting his beautiful cousin, Matilda of Flanders. William was the illegitimate son of Duke Robert, the Devil, and Arletta, daughter of a tanner. William first attracted his father's interest by his tremendous physical strength and his likeness to the Norman Line. And having no legitimate heirs, he began to put him across as his successor. As we say today, William had plenty of political "savvy" and cast a matrimonial eye on his cousin, Matilda of Flanders.

But Matilda had more splendid ancestors than a Daughter of the American Revolution, coming from the line of Alfred the Great. She turned up her nose at her cousin and would have none of his wooing.

William's method is not to be recommended today or very likely he'd wind up in the Police Court or possibly at the whipping post if he lived in Maryland or Delaware. Tired of having his illegitimacy referred to by Matilda, he marched up back of her when she was having a canter on horseback, lifted her from the saddle, rolled her in the mud, and gave her a good trouncing. And Matilda, in whatever was the ancient equivalent of "what a man" began to think about him.

They were married, lived happily ever after, had ten children, and Matilda celebrated the end of her husband's exploits in the famous Bayeux Tapestry which until the present was preserved in the Cathedral. The Bayeux is 20 inches in height but upwards of 231 feet in length and was embroidered in eight different shades of worsted.

Strange when the old town of Caen was reduced to rubble, St. Stephens Abbey with William's bones under the altar, remained intact. And the adjacent fane of Holy Trinity, where Matilda is buried, stands in an equally good state of preservation. Were these monument-builders left standing as a monument to the adage that it doesn't pay to be too meek, or too themeek when he goes a-courting?

Fashion Flashes

THE EVENING STAR in the sartorial sky next season will undoubtedly be the elaborate restaurant suit. Black woolen is used for a smart suit made with one button closing, and tapering shawl revers of pale blue slipper-satin embroidered in jet. Blue satin turn-back cuffs are matte.

A NEW VERSION of a reliable fur makes its bow for autumn buying. Ermine is blended racoon processed and dyed in stone marten color, a warm tan tone. A full hooded coat of medium length with three-stripe turn-back cuff and cardigan neckline widening into revers.

THE SUCCESS of ermine accessories last winter simply calls for a return engagement. Barrel muffs and toques of ermine are slated for promotion to point up the black restaurant suits and coats. Ermine bands, ear forsmen, and ermine trimmed gloves are also due for presentation.

A GOOD TEAM is made up of black crepe and sheer with satin. An early fall dress of black crepe with bracelet length sleeves and a deep square neckline has three very wide satin bands in front of the skirt from the waist down. These permit only a very narrow portion of the crepe to show. A huge pin wheel chou of satin at the neckline is held by an aquamarine pin.

NEXT SEASON look for the short topper with luxurious fur trimming. Mess green suede woolen is used for a 33-inch coat fashioned on mandarin lines and finished with a lavish border of cross fox.

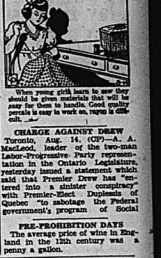
The Experts Say

Ottawa, Aug. 14.—(CP)—Small Talk: If you are one of the large number of Canadians who prepare special meals for the small children in your home, the Pensions Department Nutrition Divisions advises you to save time and energy by making the same basic meal do for both children and adult. And it needn't be dull for the adults, either. Build around almost the essential foods listed in Canada's Food Rules, then season cooked simply for the children; add a little imaginative flavoring and seasoning for the adults.

EGGS are one of our more important foods from a nutritional standpoint and they may be used liberally in our menus to add variety to summer meals. There are many modes of ways: in sandwiches, combined with other foods as in soufflés, salads, desserts for smoothness and flavor, in desserts such as fruit whips.

Eggs hard cooked and devilled, sliced or chopped, may be added to salads, and when an egg per serving is allowed, a light salad becomes a main course like the following Garden Salad recommended by the Canadian Department Consumer Section.

Garden Salad: For six servings grate 1 1-2 cups raw carrots, 1 1-2 cups raw cabbage and 1 1-2 cups shredded cabbage and 1 1-2 cups finely chopped cooked cold cooked cold sick eggs. Arrange lettuce leaves on individual serving plates and arrange beets and carrots in lightly piled mounds on opposite sides of the plates. In between, place mounds of spinach and cabbage. Arrange eggs cut or devilled hard cooked eggs in centre of plate and sprinkle with parsley or watercress. Serve with dressing.



Flower Talk:—With the gladioli season in changeling and the cosmos tall spikes of bloom brightening every flower lover's home, this tip may increase the life of the flowers and your appreciation of them: When all but the top bloom on the stalk have wilted cut off the remaining stalk and float them in a large shallow dish of water. Their resemblance to water lilies will please a family cool off these sweltering August days.

Bacon for Breakfast

In summertime, breakfast is a particularly important meal. Make sure your family gets a breakfast that is both appetizing and nutritionally right!

Hot weather does things to peoples' appetites, but their nutritional needs are just as great. That's why wise wives and mothers lay special stress on breakfast as the summer moves along. And for all-round nutritional value and food energy, you still can't beg the old fashioned eggs and bacon. But eggs and bacon need not always be served the same way. In the panel I make one suggestion which has been very popular wherever it has been tried. You can think of others . . . scramble the eggs sometimes . . . or make an omelette . . . serve bacon with marmalade or jelly, on pancakes. But make the morning meal sustaining and attractive.

Dizzy Trout of Detroit Tigers May Be First Major League Pitcher To Win Twenty Games

Hurler Chalks up His 19th Run on Sunday by Downing A's

CARDS WIN TWO

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sport Writer.)

Paul Dizzy Trout, Detroit's right-handed pitching ace, the only active American League hurler to win 30 games last year, may become the first to reach that figure this year.

The hard-working Tiger twirler achieved his 19th victory, more than any other Major League hurler when he blanked Philadelphia Athletics 6-0 in the nightcap of a twin bill after the A's won the opener 6-1. The Tiger defeat in the first game ended a nine game winning streak.

The league-leading St. Louis Browns and runner-up Boston Red Sox divided the first two games in their "crucial" four-game series, the Red Sox winning the opener 7-6 in 13 innings, and the Browns winning the second 7-3 in 11 innings, and the opening morning the nightcap 6-1, cut to five innings by Manager Ossie Vitt's 7 p.m. curfew law.

Gains 15th Win.

Max Lanier gained his 15th victory of the season and his fifth over the Dodgers in the opener as the National League-leading St. Louis Cardinals took two games from Brooklyn 4-1 and 7-3. Harry Brecheen got credit for his 11th win against two defeats in winning the second game.

Pittsburgh Pirates swept a twin bill from Boston Braves 2-1 and 3-1. Frank Colman hit his fourth homer in the first game to win the second contest.

New York Yankees and Chicago White Sox split as the Yanks won the opener 10-1 and the White Sox came back to take the second 11-3. Russ Derry of the Yankees joined the select group of seven American leaguers when he hit a grand slam home run in the third inning of the opener.

Philadelphia Phillies took both ends of a double header from Chicago Cubs 3-2 and 7-6. The twin triumph moved Dutch Leonard into sixth place, one game ahead of the Dodgers, both tied back into the National League cellar.

TORONTO LEAFS DEFEAT BISONS IN TWIN BILL

Montreal Royals Also Take Double Bill From Leading Orioles.

BEARS BREAK EVEN

By the Associated Press

Montreal Royals, slipping and nearly much out of the International League pennant race, came to life Sunday to put on one of the most concentrated slugging exhibitions of the season.

As they defeated Baltimore Orioles twice, 10-9 and 7-6, the Royals counted nine of their total of 17 runs as a result of home runs. It was Ed Rivera, who had already hit one four-master who saved the first game for the Royals when he exploded that pentleut of all hits, a home run with the bases loaded, in the last of the ninth.

The blow evened the count at 9-9 and set the stage for the 10th inning, when Eddie Basinski doubled Jean Pierre Roy home with the run that won.

Smut Aderholt maintained his title as one of the heavy hitters of the loop when he uncorked a grand slam home run in the night-cap against Red Rembre, ace pitcher of the league. The Royals were forced to go into extra innings in the first game, too, winning in the eighth.

Newark Bears copped a twin bill through and win the pennant, broke even with Rochester and climbed to within 1-½ games of the lead. The Wings took the first, 2-1, as Glen Gardner and Al Epperly each hooked up in an airtight pitchers' battle. Don Johnson, young rookie who has set to the mound for his fourth victory in the afterpiece, 5-4.

Bob Malloy, only Syracuse pitcher who has beaten Jersey City this year, turned the trick again the first game of two, 5-4. The second game was Crip Coll with a 4-0 decision, although he needed help from Ken Brondell.

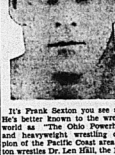
Buffalo lost two to Toronto, 7-0, and 3-1, for their seventh and eighth defeats in their last eight starts. Luther Knerr threw the seven-hit shutout in the first game and sparkled as he squelched a Bison rally in the seventh inning by striking out Andy Seminick, Al Unser and Les Floyd. The Bisons were saved from a shutout when Seminick clouted a homer in the nightcap.

Latta Downs Local Ball Nine 15 to 14

In a free-hitting baseball game played at the Alemite Field yesterday afternoon, Don Empson's Latta nine out-slugged the local St. Mike's Juniors to win 15 to 14. A goodly crowd was on hand to enjoy the afternoon's pastime despite the intense heat.

Latta scored six runs in the first inning to assume a lead they never relinquished, although the St. Mike's kids battled back strongly and came within one of tying the score by tallying a run in the ninth. "Lefty" Hall started for the visitors for Latta, but gave way to Manager "Doc" Empson in the eventh after St. Mike's had scored 13 runs. Incidentally the local "Irish" lads scored four runs in the second, fifth and seventh innings, but after spoiling Latta six the lead was too heavy to haul down. Dick Plaisance started the route as the St. Mike's pitcher. Hall walked seven and struck out five, while Empson fanned seven batters on balls and struck out four.

Bailey, Gifford and Lawrenson provided the Latta punch of attack while Strachan, Fitzpatrick and Adams provided the clutch hitting for the Irish.



The lineups:

St. Mike's: Bush as, Hewson c, Hogan rf, R. Bush lf, Soules 2b, Strachan 3b, Fitzpatrick p, Adams cf and Walther 1b.

Latta: Bailey 2b, Gifford lf, Emerson cf, Empson as and p, Lawrenson 1b, Lawrence c, Golden c, Gray c and Hall p and as.

Umpires: Dickey and Fitzpatrick.

Sexton wrestles Dr. Len Hill, the Hollywood ring villain, in the main bout of a three-bout all-star card at the Hume Arena on Wednesday night. This is an ordinary bout as Hall and Sexton battled to a full hour draw last week when each contestant gained a fall and one-half leaving the fans quite happy when Sexton evened matters. Hall has challenged Sexton's right to the Pacific Coast title so the boys will go to it at hammer and tongs again Wednesday night.

In support Promoter Tunney signed Wilbur "Toar" Morgan, the latest contender, to meet Jerry Monahan and Bob Wagner to wrestle Pierre DeGlane in the season's strongest card.

Rookie Hurler Beats Leaders For First Time

First Time Rex Cecil Ever in a Big League Park.

FLIES TO GAME

By LEROY ATKINSON
Associated Press Sport Writer.

Boston, Aug. 14—(AP)—Rex Cecil, 21-year-old Red Sox rookie pitcher from San Diego Padres of the Pacific Coast League, made transportation and sports history of some sort during the week-end when he came down from the skies to beat the league-leading St. Louis Browns the first time he ever stepped into a Major League ball park.

Acquired by the Red Sox an emergency replacement for Tex Hughson—18-game winner who has left the American Navy — Cecil hurried to the airport Friday at San Diego and started for Boston. Several hours later the pitcher was seated off the plane in Fenway Arta, because of a military priority on space. Cecil left Tuesday Saturday on another plane and arrived in Boston Sunday afternoon. Not once on the trip had he enjoyed sleeping-plane accommodation. Instead he sat up and dozed.

In Boston on Sunday he leaped off the plane; actually kissed the aircraft a fond farewell and was rushed to Fenway Park where the second-place Red Sox were in combat with the first-place Browns in 10,100 degrees of heat as part of a Sunday double-header opened.

Never mind how that Cecil been in a Major League park or seen a Major League game, even in the stands. Never mind that he'd won 16 of 21 games he'd pitched before he caused that worthy of fan, to retire the league leaders shutout.

Well, that was Cecil's first inning in the Majors. He continued shutout ward, pitching in all four innings, yielding three hits, striking three batters to come up with his first Major League triumph, 7-0, in the 18th inning on the echo of Bobby Doerr's homer.

He was a hero. What were his plans?

"Plans I gotta find myself a place to live. That's the first thing in town," quoth he nonchalantly and ambled away.

CASUAL COMMENT

By K.J.C.

Little Steve, six, was a problem child, which caused his mother anguish no end. One day when he got an invitation to a playmate's birthday party. As he left the house, his mother's last words to him was: Stephen, I've asked Mrs. Wilson to send you home when the party is over. Now be one bad word.

Twenty minutes later Steve was back home. His mother was angry. Steve was sent to bed. His attempts at explanation were ignored. A little later, however, his mother softened and went upstairs to see how Steve was taking it. Sitting at his bedside, she inquired: "Tell me truthfully, Steve, just why Mrs. Wilson sent you home. What did you do?"

Stephen (humiliated, but still truthful): Do? I didn't do nothing. That party ain't till tomorrow.

Hens Suspended.

The executive of the Belleville Men's Softball League met over the weekend and suspended players for the season indefinitely. The suspension followed last Friday's playoff game between the C.N.R. "Marines" and C. N. R. during which Hens were ejected from the game by Umpire Harold Bawden for continued actions unbecoming a player or a gentleman. President Joe Samuels today stated the suspension might last two or three months, depending considerably upon the future action of players during the remainder of the playdowns. This may look like drastic action, but players must learn to curb their actions, especially their talk. Any future outbreaks, similar to last Friday, will see even more drastic action taken by the league," President Samuels announced in warning to all concerned.

Manager Max Peoples, of the Marines, sent a formal protest to the league suggesting a change in umpires for the remainder of the Marine-C. N. R. series. The league executive gave the matter careful consideration, and today Secretary Don Lee announced that Wilbur Kiser, Gerald Barriage and Eddie Schreider had been named as possible umpires to officiate in the remaining games of the series. Wilbur Kiser, a veteran player in his own right who is putting in his first year as an arbiter, calling balls and strokes, with Gerald Barriage behind the plate, are umpiring. In the event either official is unable to assume his role, then Schreider will be pressed into service.

The league executive instructed umpire-in-chief Harold Bawden to clear both benches tonight pertaining only players, coaches and managers in uniform the right to the players' benches. This ruling should have been enforced long since before. With the series standing at two games to one in favor of the Marines, tonight's match is an important one for both teams.

Girls' Problem.

President Charlie Barnett's Ladies Softball League also has run into a snagg. The gals were to have played every night this week at the Armouries in order to catch up in their schedule. However, Secretary Barnett and his cohorts must have forgotten all about the Kinsale Club carnival, that will utilize the outfield of the Armouries instead of the gals on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. However, tonight Bellaire and Jim Semark's Combines start their playdown series following which President Barnett may have to make some announcement regarding the remainder of this week's scheduled games. In all probability they may have to be postponed until next week, that is aside from tonight and Friday. Already the SAOO-Bargers and Universal-Bonnheerie series have one game completed in a best-in-three series.

Blank the Reds.

Six Red pitchers have buried a total of 54 shutout innings in 54 starts, 11 different pitchers have been the winners of 11 shutouts against Cincinnati. Rube Fischer of the Giants became the eleventh with an 8 to 0 victory over Bucky Walters in the first game, recently, which also was the first time Fischer won at the Polo Grounds this year by a New York pitcher.

Pitchers who have hurled shutouts over the Reds this year are Hank Wyse and Claude Passeau of the Cubs, Al Jurisich and Mort Cooper of the Cardinals, Max Butcher of the Pirates, Johnny Allen of the Giants, Ken Raffensberger of the Phillies and Jug Tobin and Ira Hutchinson of the Braves. Nate Andrews and Al Javery of the Braves collaborated in a shutout over the Reds, Andrews being the starter.

Every team in the league except Brooklyn now has banked the Reds at least once, while the Reds in turn have blanked all opponents except Philadelphia.

Remember When.

James J. Jeffries retained his world's heavyweight boxing crown 41 years ago today by outpointing James J. Corbett in ten rounds at New York. Jeffries kept the title until defeated by Jack Johnson, the first negro heavyweight titleholder. Nearly 27 years later to the day, Joe Louis, colored Detroit battler and present heavyweight champion, became the second colored titlist.

Good Problem.

Wrestling fans are talking about Wednesday night's main bout between Frank Sexton, the undefeated heavyweight, and the villainous Dr. Len Hall, but they've completely overlooked the semi-final on the week's card — Bob Wagner and Pierre DeGlane — in the opener. DeGlane was a top-notch boy but there ever was one and how Marse Tunney has managed to get these two hes-illners on as openers is the six dollar question. A Wagner-DeGlane bout would be top billing in Montreal.

LESSON NO. 484

Not every contract that you play requires an expert's skill. Alertness to a detail may suffice—and often will.

Get your mind working on this deal:

Suppose South is declarer at a contract of seven spades. And suppose the opening lead from West is a club. It looks as if the needed 13 tricks are easy to take.

However, a careless south could easily mutf the grand slam. The only thinking of the hasty harpooner who insists on pulling all the opponent trumps before he does anything else.

South cops the first trick with the club jack and draws two rounds of trumps. So far, so good. But he learns that west has left two more trumps and he must not draw them at once.

If he draws all the trumps right now, he will have none left with which to trump red cards. So, he must win a trick with the diamond ace and trump a dummy diamond in the south.

The club queen must be led from south and overtaken by dummy's club king. Dummy leads another diamond and south trumps it, using up his last south trump.

But how a small club from south is won by dummy club ten and dummy leads the two last trumps from there. After that, south has the rest with top hearts and a club. Heed what you need.

When you have time to study a deal like this in cold print, it may seem easy. Not so in the heat of a bridge game. There are too many things you are trying to remember at one time.

If you take your time and plan slowly, you reach a decision and usually get it right. Even so, there is worrying to do about which suit an opponent is likely to trump. Watch your plan jells.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Knickerbocker Holiday"

Proof of the pudding was offered in "Knickerbocker Holiday", a merry, tune-filled motion picture adaptation of the Maxwell Anderson-Kurt Weill hit play of some seasons ago.

Harry Joe Brown who produced and directed last night's film for Producers Corporation of America translated the musical comedy to the screen with all of the romping humor, gaiety and songs that made it an outstanding success on the stage.

It would be hard to imagine a more perfect cast for job than was done for "Knickerbocker Holiday," Nelson Eddy one of our own prima favorites had ample opportunity to show why he has maintained the large and faithful fan following he can boast. In a role admirably suited to his many talents, Mr. Eddy played a swashbuckling devil-may-care newspaperman of old New Amsterdam who fought vigorously for freedom at the press at a time when his fellow-colonists men were not aware of those blessings. Besides giving a light but hard - hitting performance the actor-baritone gets the opportunity to sing seven of the kind of tunes which delight the ears.

The versatile and much beloved veteran Charles Coburn, turns in the greatest characterization of his magnificent career as that tough old scamp, Governor Peter Stuyvesant.

Playing the imperious Dutchman with all of his own tart humor, Coburn had a large part of the movie audience almost literally rolling in the aisles. He adds more notches to an already full acting belt with his singing of the rib-tickling "September Song" and by his swift-paced love affair with the girl in the case—Constance Dowling.

The second feature to be shown on this program is "The Secrets of Scotland Yard" a rousing Edgar Barrier, Stephanie Bachelor, C. Aubrey Smith and Lionel Atwill. The Universal News will be shown.

AT THE BELLE

"The Sullivans," Heart-Warming Make room in your heart for all of them — "The Sullivans" have moved in.

As all who were there to greet them Saturday at the Belle Theatre will testify 20th Century-Fox has brought to the screen the family of the year—and the story of the year—in the great, glorious and heart-warming picture of a lifetime.

"The Sullivans" is the story of the famous Waterloo, Iowa, Sullivans which is true of the five fine red-headed brothers whose devotion to their country — and each other — stirred the heart of the nation.

It's the story of "Pa" and "Ma" Sullivan, and sister "Gen"; and the story of Katharine Mary who became a Sullivan in name and spirit when she married the youngest of the boys. Irish as the Blarney Stone, American as the Red, White and Blue, they're the kind of people you'd like to be, in the picture you're bound to love.

For in this stirring story of one American family that became, in one shining hour, a family of great Americans, is the story of America itself—the reflection of our every hope and aspiration. The ideals by which we fight. And 20th Century-Fox has given them lovingly and delightfully beyond any motion picture experience you've ever enjoyed.

In essence "The Sullivans" is the biography of five typically American children—their carefree childhood, and their emergence into clean-cut manhood; fighting, scrapping, playing, romancing. Scene after scene is crammed with rich, rollicking humor, heart-stirring poignancy and the glowing spirit of the stuff America is made of. Scenes are made of.

When the youngest of the five Sullivan boys falls in love, it naturally becomes a cooperative affair. The courtship of Bud and Sally nearly wrecks the romance, but too, their sense of devotion and competitive spirit welds it together again more strongly than ever.

Anne Baxter's performance as "Katherine Mary" is nothing short of superb. Receiving her position as one of the most talented of the younger generation now on the screen. Thomas Mitchell climaxes his distinguished film career with a typically fine performance of "Pa" Sullivan that stands high among his greatest screen portrayals. As "Mom," Selena Royle gives a warm, appealing and unforgettable performance. Trudy Marshall one of Darryl F. Zanuck's promising young "Stars of Tomorrow" scores another hit with his selection in the role of "Genevieve," the only daughter and sister in the five famous brothers.

Lloyd Bacon has directed "The Sullivans" in a brilliant hand, maintaining the heart-warming sentiment and human interest on a high level throughout. Sam Jaffe, executive producer and Mark Hellinger producer has given the film a production worthy of the name it bears.

Motion pictures just aren't made any bigger, better or greater than "The Sullivans." It's a picture to see and to remember.

The Canadian News of the Day and "The Green Line," a Terrytoon colorful cartoon precede the feature attraction. Continuous shows will be presented today.

AT THE BELLE — Ann Baxter and Edward Ryan in the romantic fun-filled story, "The Sullivans," featuring Thomas Mitchell. "The Sullivans" is not a War Picture.

To the naked eye the set looks incongruous—a busy New York City street, automobiles in evidence, street urchins dancing on the sidewalk for pennies, pedestrians pausing to and from ..... a restaurant... a dwelling house, a music shop amidst the rolling hills on the south and the Sierra Madre mountains in the north, very much in evidence.

Detroit Shotmaker Carded 280 Four Under Par For Four Rounds

Toronto, Aug. 14—(CP)—Al Watrous was back in Detroit today richer by $3,000 he picked up by winning the three-day Maple Leaf open tournament at suburban Scarboro's Golf Club.

Watrous picked up first prize money despite what could have been a disastrous four-over-par 78 on the last 18 of the 72-hole affair. However, he wound up with 280, four under par for the full distance. He was chased all through Saturday's rounds by Vancouver's Fred Wood who wound up with a pair of 72s for a 72-hole score of 285. Wood was enriched by $1,000 through his performance.

A total of $7,100 was split among the professional linksmen while the amateurs took away $100 in bonds and merchandise. Vancouver's Ken Black and Stick Wirnock of Burlington, Ont., shared first place among the amateurs with 296. Black blew a chance to top the amateur field when he helped himself to three putts on the last hole of the last round for a 78.

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 11

"Thank you, Althea. I appreciate you sharing your troubles with me. I'm very happy to be of any help possible. Now, what is it all about?"

"First, she said, "I must tell you how it happened."

She explained how the letter addressed to Norwood had accidentally been put in her pile of correspondence.

"I have no idea where it came from or how it got there", she added. She opened her desk and produced the letter. "Here, read this".

Clyde adjusted his glasses and examined the letter closely. He read it through twice before putting it down on the desk.

"What do you think of it"? the dean inquired, eagerly.

Clyde leaned back in his chair and stared out the window. The smile was gone from his face now. He was very serious.

"I wish", he said, "you hadn't shown me that letter".

"I knew you would react that way". There was a note of triumph in Miss Marston's voice at having her judgment vindicated.

"Well, you haven't told me what you think about the letter", she prompted.

"What do you think?"

"That's what has been bothering me so. I wonder what Dr. Norwood's scheme is? I'm convinced by the letter that he has one".

"You mean—"

Hallard Trust.

"Yes", she answered, half defiantly, "I mean that I think we have accidentally stumbled onto something that must have been going on for some time, right under our noses. It looks to me as if Dr. Norwood and Mr. Fields intend to break the Hallard trust, or at least part of it, give some money to Jeanne and divide the balance between themselves.

"It's terrible to make such an accusation, but I don't see how anyone could get any other impression from that letter. It's shocking — I don't know when I've been so upset".

"It is rather shocking at that, isn't it?" Clyde commented.

"What am I to do with this letter, Doctor Clyde? I really am in a quandary".

"Well, I suppose some people would consider such a letter a great weapon for blackmail", he said, facetiously.

"How can you joke about such a thing?" Miss Marston was indignant.

"It's a bad habit, Althea, forgive me".

"You don't imagine, for a moment that I want to take any advantage of such a thing, do you?"

"Of course not, my dear Miss Marston. No more than I would".

"I've considered all sorts of ways to get the letter out of my hands. I even thought I might find an opportunity to slip it among the correspondence of Dr. Norwood's desk. But I certainly would die in my tracks if I were caught doing such a thing, or if he learned that I had seen the contents of this letter from Mr. Fields. It's strange, but I have the most peculiar feeling a guilt myself, just suspecting what may be going on here".

Sense of Honor.

"That shows your very high sense of honor. Other people might reach in many different ways. Some would see it as an opportunity for blackmail, to gain something for themselves. Others would charge boldly into Dr. Norwood's office and charge him with his sins to his face, and demand an explanation".

"Oh, I could never do a thing like that".

"I know you couldn't. You're entirely too kind hearted to want to cause anyone distress".

"Then what in the world shall I do with this horrible letter? I can't keep it around here in my desk where someone might see it and read it".

"If you want my very best advice, Miss Marston, I would say to destroy it—burn it, and then scatter the ashes".

He arose to his feet and prepared to leave.

"You'll keep this in strict confidence?"

"Of course. It's your secret, Miss Marston, not mine. I'll not mention it to a soul unless you want me to. Meanwhile, I'll forget that I ever heard of the letter and not by any word or deed so much as intimate that I know something that could rock the College to its foundations".

"Thank you, Dr. Clyde. I knew I could rely upon you. I feel some better already, now that I have shared my secret. It was almost more than I could bear alone".

Disappointed.

When he had left, she settled back in her chair and considered what he had said. She was frankly, disappointed. She had expected better advice from Clyde.

Perhaps she had counted too much on putting her burden on conscience on someone else, she told herself. She couldn't blame Dr. Clyde for not rushing in to shoulder an responsibility for something that he had only just learned from her.

She sat for some time considering what she would do with the letter. In the end she decided she would ignore Clyde's advice to burn it—at least for the time being. She got up and locked it in an inner drawer of her safe, a drawer to which only she had the key.

She was much too upset by the events of the morning to make a proper decision.

"I'll wait until I can look at things normally", she told herself before I make up my mind about anything".

Miss Marston wasn't the only one upset by Norwood's revelation that a plot had been hatched in the college.

Although he she felt some relief that her own duplicity, innocent as it was, hadn't been discovered, Jeanne was in a turmoil when she left the president's office and followed Miss Marston and Miss Fisher back to her own desk.

Miss Fisher was inclined to discuss the matter, to go over every word that Dr. Norwood had said to them and to speculate on the possible guilty person who had typewritten, but Jeanne was in no mood to talk.

She was happy when her office companion finally settled down to work and she could have a few minutes to consider the problem from all angles.

She wondered if she should report this new development to Dr. Clyde, and even as she was thinking about it he came in the office, nodded to her and tapped on Miss Marston's door. He went inside and remained for some time.

Private Office.

The girl decided that if Anyone was to tell him what Dr. Norwood had revealed to the three of them, it was Miss Marston. As the school head wanted Clyde to know about it, he could very easily call him into his private office and tell him about it.

She was learning, as the result of her double dealing, not to volunteer too much information when it was available from other sources.

That way, she reasoned, she wouldn't get herself into any more trouble than she already was in.

No, she wouldn't tell Clyde about the typewriter in the outer office. He probably knew all about it, anyway, from his friend, Mr. Levering.

The typewriter incident, however, strengthened the belief that someone at the college knew all about her. Knew her real identity and how she had happened to come here.

How that she knew there was someone in the vicinity who was working for the enemy, the feeling of danger came again. She felt she was being allowed to go on as she was on sufferance. That some day the persons who had arranged for her to escape from Lisbon and return to America would demand payment for their help.

In Daylight.

Again she thought of simply walking away from the college at noon, going to the station in Shelton and boarding the first train out of town. Surely she wouldn't be followed in broad daylight, especially if she took pains to make her walk into town seem casual, as though she were on some little errand.

Once away from the college and from Shelton, she felt confident of her ability to elude anyone who might be interested in her. She had money; now, money she had earned by her work in Miss Marston's office.

Not a lot, but enough, to make her way by a circuitous route to California where she would find her aunt, make her explanations and forget that she ever had been involved in anything so sinister as a spy ring.

At a quarter to twelve her mind was made up. She would simply walk away from the office, not go near the room to get any of her belongings. Simply disappear from sight. Miss Marston would be worried about her—she knew that. She was sure that the dean was genuinely fond of her.

She hated the thought of causing the woman pain, the woman who had been so kind to her, but it had to be. Any if she were to escape.

A picture of Max Bennett appeared suddenly before her eyes. What about Max? It would be harder than she thought to go away from him without a words. Surely he must hope to see her again him again. Perhaps after the war—

Then, as the hands of the clock came together at the noon hour, she abruptly changed her mind. No, she couldn't run away now. She had much more to consider than herself.

She had made a promise to Dr. Clyde and through him to the F.B.I. She shall not go back on her decision, to do her bit to entrap the people who were secretly serving Hitler in the very heart of America.

So instead of making an excuse that she had an errand in town, she turned to Miss Fisher and asked if she were going to have her lunch at the cafeteria.

Miss Fisher was, and the two of them went out together. Jeanne steered the conversation on other subjects while they ate, and there was no further mention of the visit to Dr. Norwood's office.

Miss Fisher's only reference to anything that happened during the morning was about the letter to Dr. Norwood which had become mixed with Miss Marston's mail.

"I never see her quite so upset about anything", the secretary remarked. "Seems to me a very simple mistake. It might happen to anyone. It would be hard to get a wrong letter in someone's file".

"It seems trivial to me too", Jeanne agreed. "Perhaps she has felt she was being allowed to go so much responsibility for all the girls in this school".

Miss Marston's worries and everyone else's worries ceased to interest her from that afternoon, however, when the thing she had unconsciously dreaded ever since she had come to Shelton happened.

As she was walking across the campus toward Miss Marston's home, a man stepped from out of the trees on the path and confronted her. He held out his right hand, the back toward her. On his third finger she saw a large ring, the exact duplicate of the one she wore.

"You are to take this envelope into Chicago on the seven o'clock train", he said. He handed her a plain white envelope. She looked at both sides of it. There was no writing on either side.

"But—but to whom shall I take it"?

Instructions.

"There will be instructions later where you are to deliver it. The only thing you have to remember is that it is to be put in the hands of Mr. Brewster. Remember, the seven o'clock train to Chicago".

The man vanished among the trees as mysteriously as he had appeared, leaving the girl staring at the envelope in her hands.

At home, she quickly telephoned Dr. Clyde.

"You must do as you were told", he advised when she asked what she should do. "There is nothing to be afraid of. Everything is looking after you, don't forget".

She remembered suddenly that she had a date that evening with Max, and tried to reach him — unsuccessfully. He had gone, however, and there was no chance to intercept him.

Kay agreed, when she asked her, to tell Max that she had been unexpectedly called away. She would explain later. Jeanne said.

WALL STREET

New York, Aug. 14. (AP)—Buyers were particularly in today's stock market and a high degree of selectivity characterized recoveries. Such further nibbling as developed was attributed partly to renewed confidence in reconversion prospects should the Nazis suddenly collapse.

Interruptions to the flow of munitions from the factories, however, were not overlooked by the buyers. Steels, motors, rubbers, aircraft and shipbuilding issues were all under pressure.

Transfers approximated 1,000,000 shares.

Six hundred carloads of supplies useful to Canada have been turned out in the last 12 months by German prisoners-of-war in one of Canada's largest internment camps it has just been revealed. The work program, directed by 20 officers and men of the Veterans Guard of Canada has moved into the big business brackets, and these pictures, first to be released of factory operations in a Canadian prisoner-of-war camp, show some of the work. The camp, located near Montreal and officially designated as Internment Camp 42 is commanded by Lt.-Col. W. D. Graham, M.C., V.D., of Belleville, Ont., (top left) and a view of one section of the prisoners' living quarters is shown, centre left. One article manufactured is wooden shoe trees and at top right Lt. D. M. Aird of Toronto, in charge of this branch of the work, checks a shipment with one of the prisoners engaged in the factory. All articles manufactured are carefully examined before being passed and (at centre, right) aimed before being passed and (at centre, right) aimed before being passed and (at centre, right) Joseph Donnet, inspector of furnishing and bedding, examines hospital operating masks turned out by the prisoners in the sewing shop. Stretcher carriers for conveying wounded men are a big item on the factory production sheet and (in lower photo) two prisoner-of-war technicians are pictured working on one of the carriers. Prisoners are paid for their work and deal with the camp authorities through an official camp "spokesman." Majority are German merchant seamen, many with highly skilled trades as background for their camp activities.

TRIO OF LEADERS FOR FIRST TIME

Liberal Progressive Conservative and C.C.F. Heads All Chosen Since 1939 New Brunswick General Election

Fredericton, Aug. 14. (CP)—Leaders of the three parties involved in the New Brunswick general election Aug. 26 have one thing in common—all are leading a party in an election campaign for the first time.

Hon. J. B. McNair became premier after Hon. A. A. Dysart led the Liberals to victory in the 1939 election. Premier McNair is a candidate in York County, where he suffered defeat in the same election before winning a by-election in Victoria.

Choice of Hugh Mackay as Progressive Conservative leader also was made after the last election. Mr. Mackay is seeking re-election in Kings County. The Co-operative Commonwealth Federation campaign leader, J. A. Magidge, is the tyro of the party chiefs. His candidature in Saint John city is his first public political venture.

The two older parties already have nominated most of their candidates and will contest all 48 seats. The C.C.F., slower in getting candidates into the field, have said they also will be making a fight for each seat when nomination day arrives Aug. 14. This party made its first appearance in a New Brunswick election in 1935, when the solitary C.C.F. candidate met overwhelming defeat in Saint John City.

Premier McNair is a lawyer, Mr. Mackay, a financier and Mr. Muggridge, an electrician. Other candidates represent most phases of New Brunswick life, with farmers and lumbermen predominating among those in basic industries. Of professional men in the list, lawyers are most numerous. There are four doctors, two coal mine operators, merchants, council councillors and wardens, a dentist, druggist and a combined undertaker and a blacksmith.

The candidates include three army men—Capt. William T. Cooper, C.C.F., running in Saint John City; Sgt. L. Keith Ingersoll, Progressive Conservative, Charlotte, and Dr. E. T. Kennedy, Progressive Conservative, Kings.

Ministerial Changes

New cabinet appointments were made early last month. Hon. F. W. Pirie, minister of lands and mines, also became head of a new department of industry and reconstruction. He is a candidate in Victoria. Hon. J. A. Doucet, former minister of health and labor, was appointed minister of health and social services while Premier McNair took over the labor department. Mr. Doucet seeks re-election in Gloucester. Hon. J. J. Hayes Doone, provincial secretary-treasurer and a candidate in Charlotte, assumed the presidency of the executive council.

Other ministers and their constituencies are: Hon. A. C. Taylor, minister of agriculture, Westmorland; Hon. J. Gaspard Boucher, chairman of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, Madawaska; Hon. C. J. Blakeny, minister of education, federal and municipal relations, Moncton City, and Hon. W. S. Anderson, minister of public works, Northumberland.

Dr. D. McGrand, speaker of the last legislature, is running in Sunbury County.

Among Progressive Conservative candidates are two former cabinet members—Lewis Smith, once minister of agriculture, campaigning in Albert, and D. A. Stewart, former minister of public works, in Restigouche.

LAST WAR VET FED UP WITH SUPERLATIVES

By CHARLES LYNCH
(Reuters War Correspondent)

With the Canadians in France (C.P. Reuter) — Fathers and sons will have many a post-war argument over which of the two great wars was the worst, if a letter received at the front recently is any criterion. The letter is from R. McKellar, an oil company official in Halifax, N.S., who was an officer in the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in the last war.

Soldiers who have seen the letter have had no comment to make other than to say that Mr. McKellar does a good job of expressing himself.

The letter is aimed chiefly at war correspondents who describe battles by saying there was "nothing like it in the last war."

"The soldiers of the last war are getting somewhat sick of 'nothing like it in the last war' and 'the biggest and greatest battle in history,'" writes Mr. McKeller.

"The guns were wheel to wheel—nothing like it in the last war.'

"More troops and artillery concentrated on a narrow front, fighting harder, bloodier and better than was ever known before—nothing like it in the last war.'

"What do they know about the last war? Were they ever in Ypres salient where the enemy had us for years practically surrounded and could concentrate their artillery fire from the rear, both right and left on our front line and at the same time shell our front direct from his own front?

"Have they ever stood in mud and slime up to their knees for weeks on end until their feet were rotten and at the same time take a thellacking from artillery and trench mortars, bombs and snipers? Have they ever heard of gas or Paschendna's?

"In the last war, with comparably the same number of men, the Canadian casualties in four years were 230,000, including 56,000 killed. In this war, after four years and nine months the total casualties, including killed, are approximately 40,000. In the last war it took us four years to win from scratch and some of our troops (the Princess Patrida's Canadian Light Infantry) were in the line in November, 1914, three months after the declaration of war.

"Yet there was 'nothing like it in the last war'."

MRS. J. D. O'FLYNN WINS GUESSING CONTEST

Keen eyes—keen mind, it takes, it seems.

To count correctly a jar of beans.

"Thought of a number"—and won the prize.

But it wasn't much trouble, it seems for Mrs. John D. O'Flynn, 151 East Bridge Street, to win the five dollar reward offered by the Bridge Street Groceteria, for the person correctly guessing the number of beans enclosed in a glass jar. A clever mathematician, and the wife of a husband well-versed in figures, Mrs. O'Flynn coolly appraised the jar and, bingo, there it was. Judges were Messrs. John McVeigh, Orland Pinkston and Matt Currie.

Sicily Returns to Normal But Black Market Flourishes

By BILL BOSS
(C. P. War Correspondent)

Catania, Sicily (CP) — With "Catania ripresa vita normale," Signor Maria Sangiorgi ended the message she was writing on the card we had agreed to deliver to her sister in Rome.

"Catania is back to normal again," she had written. Signora Sangiorgi ought to know. She's been living here for 45 years. Capt. Alisdair Fraser, Montreal; Sgt. J. E. DeGuire, Ottawa, and L. Cpl. David King, Burlington, Ont., and myself remember Catania and Sicily as they were last year. Now, after renewing acquaintances, we agree with the signora.

Commodities are commanding high prices, principally because more money is in circulation, secondly because Sicilians will not cooperate in fighting the black market where everything one could want to eat is on the market—at a price.

Everyone receives a ration of 200 grams of bread (or flour), or pasta each day. Pasta is the grain preparation from which Italians make macaroni and spaghetti, the basis of their diet. This 200 grams represents a recent doubling of the ration from 100 grams. However, because bread and pasta are the staples, the ration is admittedly insufficient, and to supplement it Sicilians resort to the black market. Here, a month ago, they were paying $1 or more for a loaf of bread, roughly two pounds in weight. Today, the same loaf fetches 80 cents because of the increase in the regular ration.

Black Market Supporter

People can buy on the black market when the administration hasn't enough grain to raise the ration because of that enigma, the Sicilian farmer. He doesn't trust the provincial granaries and when ordered by the administration to turn over all his crop, he turns over a half, perhaps only a third. The rest he sells to the local black market racketeer. Commission combatted the black market vigorously and progress was made. Today, however, now that responsibility for governing the island has been vested in the Italian provisional government, the Commission is acting in only an advisory capacity. The Sicilians are allowing the black market to gather strength again.

The same situation obtains with olive oil which is in as great demand as flour and pasta. A ridiculously small amount trickles thru to the open market for sale at a more or less reasonable price like 30 lire (30 cents) a litre (roughly a quart), but the rest is largely channelled into the black market and sells at from $1 to $1.50 a quart. Equally is it the same with sugar, a reasonable quantity of which the island produces, and to a less degree with potatoes. Meat, cheese, vegetables, fruit are sold on the open market and prices are governed by normal laws of supply and demand. Foodstuffs supplied by the Allies are negligible, but there is enough food for everybody. In peacetime the island was 11-12th self-supporting and there's no reason for it to be less so now.

Transportation is also close to normal. All roads are in order; bus and truck services operate with special gasoline allowances from the Allies, and main railway lines are in order with the sole exception of a stretch on the east coast between Messina and Piusfreddo. Shortage of coal is the only limiting factor in railway services.

Postal, telegraph and telephone communications have been restored. Newspapers are produced daily —mostly on Canadian newsprint. Only restriction on freedom of the press is the same security censorship which applies to correspondents and writers in any Allied theatre of operations.

ALLIED LANDINGS IN SOUTH FRANCE ARE SUCCESSFUL

Great Air and Sea Blow Struck Hitler on Broad Section of Coast Near Toulon

Little Ground and No Air Opposition Reported

By EDWARD KENNEDY, AP STAFF WRITER

Rome, Aug. 15 —(AP)— The army of France and a great force of British and American troops struck Hitler on a fourth major front today, invading southern France and successfully completing all their landings along a broad section of Mediterranean beach around Toulon.

A special communique a few hours after the blow was struck said beaches along a considerable length of the Riviera had been seized by mid-morning according to schedule with scarcely any ground opposition and no air opposition.

One of the greatest airborne combat forces ever assembled paved the way for the assault and likewise carried out operations successfully far inland. Most of the airborne troops were believed to be British.

British Airborne Units.

(A communique from Gen. Maitland Wilson, Mediterranean commander, mentioned British troops as part of the invasion force while a naval communique mentioned only that French and American forces were being landed. It was presumed, therefore, that the British forces were part of the airborne units.)

(A BBC broadcast said it was officially stated that French forces "predominated" in the Allied landings.)

Striking after sunrise, seven waves of infantry splashed ashore in the first two hours and seized their initial objectives with great rapidity at many points along a 125-mile stretch of the Riviera between the great port of Marseille and Nice.

Weak Opposition.

They encountered only the weakest opposition, for enemy defenses had been pulverized by five straight days of a powerful air offensive.

Shortly before dawn a large airborne combat force descended into the rugged hills which rise from the coastline and went into a grapple with the German defenders for possession of key communications points and commanding vantage points.

The invasion was accompanied by the signal from the French National Committee and Allied commanders to all Frenchmen to rise up against their German oppressors and indications were that the well organized underground army of southern France had responded.

Scarcely a shot was fired at the big transport planes and gliders which put the air-borne troops down, and the first returning pilots of the massive fighter plane screen which covered the landings said not a single enemy plane opposed the early operations.

Incessant Bombing

Later, when fighters came from the first planes to be seen, three Messerschmitts were shot down without loss.

An Allied spotter plane flew 60 miles inland without sighting a single enemy troop concentration.

While bombers struck at the enemy incessantly at objectives inland, the huge invasion fleet of more than 200 battleships and cruisers, supported by hurled tons of steel into German coastal defenses.

British, American, French, Canadian, Netherlands, Polish, Greek and Belgian warships covered the swarms of landing craft, carrying American veterans of Italy, and the French forces which had fought in Italy and North Africa.

Experiences gained in the Sicilian, Salerno, Anzio and Normandy landings and weeks of special amphibious exercise were employed as the Allies struck along the great military avenues leading northward across France.

800 Ships

The great stab into the "underbelly of Europe," bringing the battle of France to full fury, was backed by more than 800 ships — one of the biggest fleets ever to churn the waters of the Mediterranean, and by great air power.

The prodigious invasion effort, involving hundreds of thousands of men and mountains of supplies and equipment, was far from the mouth of the Rhone River leading northward across France.

Marseille, a city of more than 800,000 population, is 25 miles east of the Rhone mouth and at the edge of a large triangular coastal plain where many important air bases are located.

75 Mile Stretch

Nice is less than 20 miles from the Italian frontier. Combat dome almost to the coast along this corridor over of Falaise appeared to be collapsing today under British blows as an avalanche of tanks and troops beat within a mile of Condé-Sur-Noireau and threatened other points along the main eastbound axis.

14,000 Air Combat Men

Rome, Aug. 15 —(CP Reuter)— The record Allied airborne force which descended on Southern France early today consisted of more than 14,000 air combat men.

In no Allied operation before had so many men been employed as this airborne force sent down behind the German coastal defences.

HITLER ORDERS ST. MALO HELD.

London, Aug. 15 (C.P. Reuter)— Hitler has radioed Col. Andreas Von Aulock ordering the port of St. Malo fortress, declaring that "as long as the garrison and a bullet remains in St. Malo, no one must give in," the German forces radio said yesterday.

COMP. STRAUSS REPORTED UNDER HOUSE ARREST

Vienna, Aug. 15 (AP) — Composer Richard Strauss has been placed under house arrest somewhere in Austria, travellers from Vienna report. . . . This cannot be confirmed, but it is known a number of his public appearances recently were cancelled.

Finds Toronto's Heat Worse Than Egypt's

Toronto, Aug. 15. (CP)—PO. Ken Rumble, R.C.A.F. veteran who spent the last two years in Egypt, arrived home yesterday and said he "never encountered anything hotter than this". He was referring to Toronto's 90-degree temperature which at that was slightly cooler than last week's high of 96.

BULLETINS

Several Miles Inland

New York, Aug. 15 —(AP)— Allied troops invading Southern France were several miles inland this afternoon, a broadcast from the invasion beachhead said.

Airborne Troops in Marseille?

New York, Aug. 15 —(CP)— The Germans have announced that Allied parachute troops have been dropped in Marseille, the B.B.C. reported today in a broadcast recorded at the C.B.S. listening station here.

Escape Corridor Collapsing

On the British Front in Normandy, Aug. 15, 5.45 p.m. —(AP)— The roof of the German escape corridor west of Falaise appeared to be collapsing today under British blows as an avalanche of tanks and troops beat within a mile of Condé-Sur-Noireau and threatened other points along the main eastbound axis.

SUB SUNK, RESCUE COMES AFTER 21 HOURS IN STORMY SEA

This photograph shows an air-sea-rescue launch hauling to safety survivors of the Royal Canadian Air Force Canso "C for Charlie" who spent 21 hours in the stormy North Atlantic after sinking a German submarine. Badly damaged by the submarine's gunfire, the landing plane piloted by Flt.-Lieut. David E. Hornell of Mimico, Ont., was forced into the sea. The crew of eight could not avoid this one rubber dinghy and took turns clinging to the side. Sergt. Donald Scott of Almonte, Ont., and Sergt. Fernand St. Laurent of Pointe au Pere, Quebec, died of exposure before help came. Flt.-Lieut. Hornell died a few minutes after this picture was taken and was posthumously awarded the Victoria Cross. Other members of the crew, all of whom have been honored for their heroic exploit were: Flt. Sergt. Bernard C. Denomy, D.S.O., of Chatham, Ont.; F/O. Graham Campbell, D.F.C., of Vancouver, B.C.; F/O. Stanley R. Mashman, D.F.C., of Nelson, B.C.; Flt.-Sergt. Jarel J. Bodnoff, D.F.M., of Ottawa, and Flt.-Sergt. Sidney Cole of Long Branch.

Reds Win Bridgehead Over Brebrza River

By DANIEL DE LUCE
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

Moscow, Aug. 15 (AP)—Russian forces started attacking freshly dug German entrenchments today in front of Grajewo, two miles south of the East Prussian border, and crashing the steel and concrete forts around Osowiec and winning a bridgehead across the Biebrza river.

Gen. G. F. Zakharov threw the full offensive might of his 2nd White Russian army group against the Germans' attempts to reorganize their frontier line just below the Mauern Lake.

"The waters of the Biebrza ran dark with enemy blood today," a front dispatch to Izvestia said. Zakharov smothered a section of the German attacks with his high-powered drive and struck directly in the rear of large enemy forces tied up in the Suwalki triangle (which East Prussia annexed in 1939) by Gen. Ivan Chernikovsky's divisions.

Town Taken, Menaced.

Not only Grajewo but Lyck in East Prussia, 12 miles to the north, was menaced by the two Russian army groups. Should these combined operations succeed, the German withdrawal from the northeastern corner of East Prussia would be imperative.

A German fortified zone three to five miles in depth has been formed with fire-blackened Nazi tanks and wrecked field guns behind the Zakharov's vanguard.

Flat boggy country intersected by numerous creeks now separates the Red Army from Lyck, East Prussian communications centre, but the Biebrza was the last major natural obstacle.

The crossing of the Biebrza came while Moscow's victory guns were booming the fall of the Nazi base of Osowiec near the stream in northern Poland.

Likely to Ease Pressure.

This new menace to the Nazi province appeared likely to ease the pressure of Gen. Ivan Chernikhovsky's 3rd White Russian army, which has been stalled a fortnight by desperate German resistance near the East Prussia-Lithuania border farther north.

LAST MAIN BLOCK TO PHILIPPINES IS NEUTRALIZED

Halmahera, 200 Miles West of New Guinea, Heavily Pounded Three Times

GREAT FIRES STARTED

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, Aug. 15 (AP)—Allied bombers, striking swiftly and with devastating accuracy, have "practically neutralized" Halmahera, the last major island block to the Philippines.

They accomplished the task in the record time of slightly more than two weeks, and with the record economy of only three major attacks upon airdromes. Halmaheras, 200 miles west of New Guinea, is about 300 miles south of Mindanao.

"Our air attacks upon Halmahera were continued, causing great fires and explosions", headquarters announced today. Air raids upon enemy targets from Timor to Borneo and the Sulus were announced.

"The enemy's airfields at Halmahera and at contiguous intermediate bases are practically neutralized, his maritime forces largely interdicted and his ground troops immobilized in their present positions.

"The flexibility of this great base is now complete".

A bomb-inflicted creeping paralysis, induced with the conquest of Saipan, Tinian and Guam in the Southern Marianas, thus has struck all along Japan's inland defence line.

Gen. MacArthur's announcement today added this warning of deeper punches to come:

CANADIANS SLUG TO WITHIN 2½ MILES OF FALAISE

Value of Fortress All but Lost Through Domination of High Ground

1,000 PRISONERS TAKEN

By ROBERT C. WILSON
(AP War Correspondent)

With the Canadian 1st Army, Aug. 15 — (AP) — First Canadian army troops slugged forward today only 2 1-2 miles from Falaise, whose value to the Germans is all but lost through the Canadian domination from the high ground north of the city of the escape routes eastward to Lisieux and Paris.

Sweeping up at least 1,000 prisoners in an offensive launched at noon yesterday, the Canadian drove far south of Epaney, where a battle now is being waged.

Lt.-Gen. Crerar is pressing home the attack on a narrow three-mile front and the Canucks have captured Sassy and Olendon villages, where pots have within observable artillery range of the Falaise-Lisieux road.

The troops now are hammering south toward Falaise in the direction of Aubligny with thus far no signs the Germans have been able to gather for a counter-attack.

Foles Draw Praise.

To the west, Polish troops in a night of fighting which drew special praise from a senior Canadian officer mopped up the Piligny area and mopping up is going on in the Quesnay woods which were heavily bombed by R. A. F. Lancasters and Halifaxes yesterday.

8,000 Tons Bombs Drop in Raids Designed to 'K. O.' Hitler's Air Units

London, Aug. 15 (AP)—At least 2,000 British and American heavy bombers were hurled today against Germany, Holland and Belgium in operational airdromes for the German air force and at seven nonmanned stations which have been used as launching sites for the flying bombs.

The widespread attacks were designed to knock out what is left of Hitler's air units before the enemy can marshal his remaining strength for all-out support of the desperate German ground forces.

The heavy bombers struck from the west, were escorted by up to 1,000 fighters. They slashed at three airfields in Belgium and two in Holland.

Allied planes were attacking the south of France for the fifth consecutive day, laying a path of blasting steel and explosives before the British, American and French forces swarming onto the Mediterranean beaches.

Overnight, R.A.F. Mosquito fighter-bombers of the two-ton blockbusters into the ruins of Berlin Targets near Paris also were hit.

Allies Clamp Giant Nutcracker On Hun 7th Army

Escape Gap South of Falaise Pinched to Distance 10 Miles

By GLADWIN HILL
(A.P. War Correspondent)

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 15 (AP) — Allied armies clamped a giant nutcracker upon France today, hitting with a massive invasion in the south even as the flying German 7th Army struggled in an incarcerating tightening Normandy trap 450 miles to the north.

Four separate British, American and Canadian armies, squeezing up on Field Marshal Von Kluge's forces of perhaps 100,000 to 200,000 men, pinched his escape gap south of Falaise to only ten miles, and sealed that off with a wall of bombs and shells.

The powerful new Mediterranean front, opening a fourth major front, is designed to chase the German from France, and link with Gen. Eisenhower's warriors in Normandy and Britany. American forces spanned the Loire south of Britany already are only 400 miles from these latest Allied liberators.

British, American and French troops, stormed ashore between Marseille and Nice, striking after the German hold on Southern France had been weakened, and reached their first objectives within an hour. Planes ripped German defences; thousands of parachutists vaulted behind the foe, and a fleet of 800 ships backed the assault.

Doubled in Scope

By dawn today, the western invasion of Europe had been doubled in scope.

Von Kluge writhed in a coffin pocket already narrowed to half its earlier size, and apparently was putting up a forced stand. Little movement was observed overnight on the Falaise escape hatch.

(Berlin broadcasts said "a furious battle continues" in the Unidentified enemy is being fought" for this narrow gap.)

Biting off this final avenue of flight were the Canadian Army pounding down from north of Falaise, and now within 10½ miles of the Americans centre, and the American 3rd. Army commanded by Lt.-Gen. George S. Patton, which was a scant eight miles south of Falaise.

The British 2nd. Army, operating west of the 1st. Canadian Army, and the American 1st. Army, farther west, pressed in against the pocketed enemy.

Americans Invest Ger

A half-dozen more towns fell as the drawstring tightened all around the Normandy pocket. The Americans invested Ger, eight miles east of Mortain, and Dondfront, 15 miles southeast. Mortain former- ly was the western tip of the German salient.

It was announced that Lt.-Gen. Omar N. Bradley, is commander of the U.S. 12th. Army group, the troops American force ever massed in battle. It includes the 3rd. Army, commanded by Lt.-Gen. Geo. S. Patton, who is hitting the comeback trail after the soldier-slapping incident in the Sicily campaign, and the 1st. Army, Gen. Bradley's old command now headed by Lt.-Gen. Courtney H. Hodges.

Canadians Surge Ahead

Formations of the 1st. Canadian Army, topping their 6,000 yard assault yesterday north of Falaise, in a new surge on a two-mile front captured Exmes and hill 186, a mount four miles north of Falaise and surged on to within 2½ miles of the vale. Epaney is barely a mile from Falaise'Falaise highway, the main German escape route from the Allied trap. The Canadians swept up at least 1,000 prisoners.

Sees Invasion From 1,000 Feet Up And Lower, No Opposition Revealed

By KENNETH DIXON
(A.P. War Correspondent)

On a medium bomber over Southern France, Aug. 15 (AP) — So far as I could see from a height of 1,000 feet above the beaches where the Allies assaulted ashore less than an hour ago no major fighting had developed.

As far as 20 miles inland a complete lack of any sign of struggle marked the rugged landscape.

From this vantage point 1,000 feet in the new Allied blows at Southern France this morning appeared to be meeting almost no resistance in the preliminary stages.

There was plenty of visual evidence, however, that the preliminary stages of the Allied amphibious parachute and glider landings have been carried out successfully.

Below, from 20 miles inland to the coastline, I saw the first wave of glider troops to strike Southern France. Some miles inland they cut loose from tow planes and glided down into little meadows between rugged crags just inside the coastline.

Within the exception of a few which crashed into ditches and fences or turned over on their backs the gliders seemed to make it safely.

Nowhere was there any sign of resistance to them. We sometimes got as low as 200 or 300 feet over the terrain and not a shot was fired at us.

The first sign of movement as scores of gliders skidded to a stop in clouds of dust came from near the overturned glider which apparently was badly wrecked. A small machine moved beetle-like from the front of a nearby glider and headed toward the one in trouble.

"There goes the first airborne jeep into action in Southern France," said Cpl. Billy Lunsback of Chicago, the bomber's 22-year-old tail gunner.

"Everything must be going okay," he said.

Along the coast and out at sea there was a complete lack of gun flashes from the direction of action. Although we only traversed the southern sector of the beachhead and, due to fleecy clouds and the low altitude could not observe the entire assault area, still we were unable to note anything resembling stiff resistance.

While it was impossible to check with perfect accuracy the 1,000 which previously had been marked out on the map, it seemed from here that almost all gliders had been landed on or near designated spots.

INTERIOR OF CAR DESTROYED BY FIRE

Lighting a match to determine how much gasoline remained in the tank of his motor car proved rather costly to Percy Mooney, Orangeville, last Sunday night when the entire interior of the vehicle was destroyed by fire.

County told investigating Provincial Police who had been proceeding south on Highway No. 14 some five miles north of Belleville, when he noticed the gasoline gauge registering rather low. Mooney says he stopped his car and lit a match over the top of the gas tank and an explosion followed. He escaped without serious burns or injuries, police were told. The rear of the car and the inside upholstery were both badly damaged in the blaze. The fire was extinguished before it reached the mechanism of the car. Traffic Officers Harry Caldwell and Chas. Sipe investigated the matter.

C.P.O. WM. HIRST RETURNS TO DUTY

Chief Petty Officer William Hirst, Royal Canadian Navy, who has been at Naval Naval Head in an Eastern Canadian port, has been discharged, and is now back on service duty.

A member of the crew of the Corvette Weyburn, C.P.O. Hirst was stricken with a streptococcus throat with three days shipping out and was immediately transferred to shore and hospital.

"Bill" put more strenuous action when his ship assisted others in the sinking of two U-boats in the Atlantic Ocean a few weeks ago.

DOUBLE FRACTURE OF FOREARM IN FALL

Falling from a roof while assisting in shingling the barn on the home of a friend, Tony Sapplo, Front Street, Trenton, was admitted to Belleville General Hospital yesterday suffering with arm injuries.

Medical attention was given to the injured man at the scene of the accident by Dr. J. Farley, Trenton, who later sent him to hospital for X-ray examination, by car. Dr. Cronk here revealed a double fracture of the forearm. His condition was satisfactory this morning.

SUFFERS BROKEN LEG WHEN HIT BY TRUCK

Trenton (Special) — Lorne W. Brown, R.R. No. 1, Bath, Ont., suffered a fractured left leg early Monday afternoon when he struck a Spotless Cleaners truck, driven by Clarence Nidder, at Trenton.

Brown was proceeding east on Dundas Street West at the time on a motorcycle and it is thought did not see the traffic signal at the corner of Dufferin and Dundas and was struck as the truck was crossing the latter. Canada going north with the traffic signal. He was rushed by ambulance to Belleville General Hospital with Dr. E. J. McQuade in attendance.

GENE HITCHON GETS TWELVE-POUND PIKE FROM OAK LAKE

The waters of Oak Lake have been most prolific insofar as season anglers are concerned, for on Tuesday morning Cece Hitchon, of this city, caught the fine pike pictured, about four pounds each. Encouraged by his fishing luck Mr. Hitchon arose early today and with a shiner as bait was successful in landing a 12-pound pike. This is believed to be one of the largest pike ever taken out of Oak Lake.

MELON PRICES REMAIN FIRM

The city market today might aptly be termed a pickaninny's paradise, for Mr. Clarky's traditional watermelons, with a few of the canteloupe was there in profusion. The quality was fine and the quality ranged in price from 30c to $1 each, while cantaloupe bringing 30c to 90c according to size.

Tomatoes dropped to $1 the bushel and 50c the basket. Green New spuds priced 50c the peck, with bunched carrots selling the same Saturday levels. Corn brought 25c. 35c the dozen according to size and quality. Tri-annual and proper ice cooking apples sold at 30 and 35c the basket, while blueberries selling at 35c the quart.

Summer pears made their market debut selling at 50c the six-quart basket. Cucumbers were plentiful at 30c the large basket. Pickling gherkins ranged from 30 to 50c for six quarts.

POLICE COURT

Apprehended on a warrant charging him with failing to attend military parade and duties on March 21st last, Tpr. J. H. Tanner, Belleville, appeared before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd today and pleaded guilty to failing to attend military parades while a member of the Argyll Light Infantry (Reserve). Tanner was fined $10, included costs, and ordered to return his military equipment to Staff Sergt. Modernization Of Home by Hydro Described to Club

Modernization of the farm home by electrical service was the subject of what was formerly called drudgery in the home, but which and other buildings was informatively described to the Rotary Club at the Monday luncheon by Mr. R. A. Jennings, of the Canadian General Electric Company.

Through the media of narrative and lantern slides, the audience were given an insight into the source and production of electric power, and the application to the needs of the rural residents of the community.

He took his audience on a pictorial tour of the Beauharnois Dam, describing and showing them how the mighty power of the St. Lawrence River is harnessed by the efforts of mere man. Huge transformers, switches, and other machines, milking apparatus, separators, graders, and chicken and egg incubators. In the home the farm wife now operates her own washing machines, ironers, toasters, and many other appliances.

"It is indeed a new way of life for our rural residents, bringing to their very feet facilities and conveniences tasks that formerly made rural life more difficult," the speaker asserted.

He showed through the medium of the lantern slides the difference in modes of operation of machinery before and after the introduction of electricity. Modern farms in Southern Ontario were equipped with owners operating electrical machines, thus greatly enlarging the facilities of electricity in the home.

The speaker was assisted by Mr. Ernest Packham, a colleague, and was introduced by Mr. Polarian Fred-David. with club appreciation expressed by Rotarian Tom Yelland, President Pinkston was in the chair.

Text of Wilson's Message to French

Rome, Aug. 15 (AP) — Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson, supreme Allied commander in the Mediterranean theatre, told the French people after the landings were made in Southern France that the object of the invasion "is to drive out the Germans and join with the Allied armies advancing from Normandy."

Text of his message:

The armies of the United Nations have landed in the south of France. Their objective is to drive out the German invaders and to free the Allied armies advancing from Normandy.

French troops are participating in these operations side by side with their comrades in arms, by sea, land and air. The army of France is in being again, fighting on its own soil for the liberation of its country with all its traditions of victory behind it. Remember 1918!

All Frenchmen—civilians as well as military—have their part to play in the campaign in the south. Your duty will be made clear to you. Listen to the Allied radio, read notices and leaflets, pass on all instructions from one man and woman to another.

Let us end the struggle as quickly as possible so that all France may resume again her free life under conditions of peace and security, and the reign of terror is ended. Long live the spirit of France and all that it stands for.

Family of Paratrooper L. W. Reid Gladdened by News He is Prisoner After Believing He Was Killed

There is gladness today in the hearts of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Reid, 35 Grier Street.

For the past two months, the clouds of sorrow and doubt have hung like a pall over the home into which three stalwart sons have gone to fight for civilization.

Two months ago an official cable brought the news that one of the boys, Paratrooper Lawrence W. Reid, of the 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion, had been killed in action on D-Day.

Two weeks later, another cable arrived. It lay on the table, while a mother's heart ached in anticipation of the word of another son.

But it brought word, that the boy was not an error. Para-trooper Reid had not been killed. Weeks went by. Yet another cable arrived, with the news that the gallant chutist was reported "missing believed killed".

On Monday, a mother's heart once more ran the gamut of human emotion. For another cable arrived, bearing the stamp of official-dom.

And with it came the sunshine of gladness. For it contained word from the International Red Cross at Geneva, that Paratrooper Reid was now alive and well, but a prisoner of war in Germany.

One of three army brothers, Paratrooper Reid enlisted some time ago with an Infantry regiment. He transferred to the 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion and spent months of rigid training in preparation for D-Day. He went over in one of the first waves, and as is now known was captured by the enemy.

A brother Sapper Elgie Reid, of the Royal Canadian Engineers, who was serving in France has suffered a broken knee-cap and is awaiting a medical board, according to a recently arrived letter.

The third son of the Reid family of fighters, Sapper Edwin Reid, is also in the army. Undoubtedly a record of which any family may well be proud.

Market and City Property Committee Under Chairmanship of Ald. Butler Has Fine Record of Achievement

Although regarded by some as a rather unimportant cog in the wheel of civic administration, the Market and City Property Committee, of which Ald. Butler is chairman, under the chairmanship of Alderman E. Ormonde Butler, has created a record of achievement the past few years, or which it may be justifiably proud.

Strangely enough, this committee, which, as the average man on the street might assume from its title, is not the money spending subcommittee of the council as might be implied but is actually the only revenue producing committee within the civic organization, apart from the Committee of Finance.

Its jobs are many and varied. For instance, it is the "purchasing agent" for city buildings. It sees that food and produce brought to market by the consumers are not only afforded a clean sanitary setting for display but that the producers are enriched through market administration.

Interior atmospheric comfort of the City Hall; installation of modern office equipment; transformation of vacant office space into revenue-producing offices; maintenance of interior decoration of city buildings, are but some of the jobs that the committee has tabled "well done" by this quiet-working but efficient member of the City Council family.

Changes Five Years

When Alderman Butler took over this important job nearly five years ago, he realized that there was plenty of work ahead for his committee. Also he realized that the whole of a proposed program, could not be done at once.

He began "at home" in the City Hall. There heating conditions were not right for best. The committee set to beat the building satisfactorily. Two furnaces were to be "merged" and a modern stoker installed. This proved not only a time-saver but was productive of an even temperature at all times.

"Workmen cannot give their best unless they have the proper tools," so said someone, and with this thought in mind, the committee not only installed a brand new book-keeping machine for the City Hall clerical staff with modern accounting methods but other modern tax-accounting machines obtainable in Canada was installed as were new adding machines and typewriters.

Chairman Butler has acted as a "fairly godfather" to worried organization and associating officials who were "stuck" for furniture, rugs and bunting. Victory Loan and officials of other organizations have expressed their gratitude or public gratitude on the part of the Market and City Property Committee.

Next, in line for the committee's attention came the city's "Big Ben." The one-hundred-year-old veteran timepiece that has braved the elements for that period of time "all smiles" with all its four faces as workmen started operations.

First, it had its "face lifted". Its "innards" were completely renovated and beside other new parts, a modern electrical winding apparatus was installed. There was a time when janitors laboriously climbed to the clock-tower and each week gave Big Ben' a new lease of life by winding it with a rope.

After all, one hundred years of steady labor on the part of any mechanism, must take its toll. Chairman Butler and his Committee give full credit to the efficiency of city hall janitors in maintaining the clock, so that today another mechanical assistance, Big Ben is nearly as good as ever. City residents should be tolerant, if the old fellow goes "off the beam" occasionally, and attribute a temporary laxity on the part of the clock, to old age, and perhaps a touch of weariness.

Revenue Through Office Space

Unused spaces in the City Hall loomed as a potential sources of revenue to Chairman Butler. The auditorium, used mainly for civic election meetings, had fallen into sad days. Lastly, or perhaps distinterest en the part of taxpayers in elections, (a corporate guard would be a crowd in comparison to taxpayers attending election meetings in the hall during the past five years) warranted the transforming of part of this space to revenue producing uses.

Accordingly approximately fifty per cent of auditorium space was turned over to the National Selective Service Board for use as offices, with the Federal Government's footing all alteration bills. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board further utilized the remaining auditorium space as well as the council chamber for meetings connected with the operation of the quota system of rationing.

In addition a small office on the main floor of the City Hall now finds the Local Ration Board which administers the area between Deseronto and Belleville, and which is responsible for the issue and maintenance of 30,000 food ration books. In this office the committee supplies light, heat and furniture.

Other war organizations which have taken advantage of the use of City Hall offices, Models Registration Board of the Army, Navy and Air Force, which has been welcomed by many fighting sons and daughters of Belleville "signed up" within the confines of "Big Ben."

Thanks to the efforts of this committee, the Police Station, now built in an attractive new interior decorative scheme, has been entirely completely re-vaited and is now a distinct credit to the city's civic structure. Lockers installed, boilers overhauled, and other work done. Proof of efficient work of this kind is in a report of the Boiler Insurance Company, that the boilers are in good condition of police station boilers.

The Market.

Another records of the city market revenue appearing to be unsatisfactory, the committee decided on a drastic change. Today the city finds the Market Square yielding to any individual. This is productive of yearly revenue amounting to about $3,000 and with $3,000. And while on this subject, the Committee and the market clerk have been able to the amount of credit for the splendid co-operation which has existed, and does not enjoys. No less than a few days ago, prominent citizens of Belleville, acting as deputy to the Governor General, gave evidence of the city government's mite and a number of private measures.

Tax-Free Indemnities Proposal For Next Session of Parliament

By JACK WILLIAMS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Aug. 15 —(CP)—Parliament today stood adjourned until Jan. 31.

The adjournment came after an arduous day's work, climaxed in the early hours of this morning with the announcement of Prime Minister Mackenzie King that plans for holding a Dominion-Provincial conference had been postponed until after the next general election.

Through one of the hottest days in Ottawa's weather records members had toiled through departmental estimates. They finished that task shortly after midnight.

Then Mr. King topped the day's proceedings with an announcement on the government's intention with regard to the conference and with a statement that in the next parliament he would support a proposal to make members' indemnities tax-free.

The matter of taxing the $4,000 indemnity to members of parliament had been a topic of discussion earlier in the session with a number of members, including Conservative Leader Gordon Graham, who claim the income taxes which in some cases reduced the indemnity to $2800 left insufficient to meet actual living expenses in Ottawa.

"I look on the opportunity as something that is provided to secure the independence and members of parliament," Mr. King said, "and it part of it will be taken away by taxation there is less assurance of independence."

Mr. King supported the stand taken previously by Finance Minister Ilsley that he could see no change should be made during the life of the present parliament, that Prime Minister Churchill knows that there was a danger that some of the ablest men will be rejected if members would find themselves financially unable to be candidates in the next election.

From the Commons chamber the members broke down the corridor to the Senate chamber where Chief Justice Thibaudeau Rinfret, acting as deputy to the Governor General, gave royal assent to the government's bills and a number of private measures.

Members of the Senate had assembled first at three o'clock in the afternoon. They adjourned until 9 p.m. and from that time on had waited about the building for the Commons to complete its business, which came at 12:30 a.m. (EWT).

In Session 123 Days

The Commons sat 123 days, compared to 119 in the session of 1943 and piled up an impressive list of legislation, most of it designed to smooth Canada's passage into and through the post-war period.

The bills to which royal assent was given included such measures as family allowances, war services gratuities, veterans' land, fishers of men and fishery products, establishment of export credit insurance and of an industrial development bank, provision for intermediate and long term farm credit, housing legislation and amendments to a number of statutes including the Bank Act and acts affected by provisions of the budget.

Discussion in the Commons during the day covered a wide range of subjects with Prime Minister Mackenzie King with his External Affairs Department responsible for approval, said both that department and the Trade Department were planning for the assembly of personnel recruited and trained to strengthen Canada's relationships with other countries.

Some time was spent on Indian Affairs and Resources Minister Crerar said his department had not yet ready undertaken a detailed study of the Indian Act with a view to revising it, in accordance with post-war. It also was proposed to extend the medical care for Indians which now was reduced because of the difficulty in obtaining doctors and nurses.

Pensions Minister Mackenzie told the Commons that plans were prepared for occupational training centres in every garrison for returned men in preparing themselves to take civilian employment. The government's proposal to establish a royal commission to investigate the Canadian coal industry also came in for some attention with Charlesse Gauthier (CCF-Quebec Bretton) and Rev. E. G. Hansell (SC-MacLeod) asking that the commission be given broad powers in its inquiry.

The War Today
Lack of Strong Resistance To New Invasion Shows Nazis' Weakness

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

The outstanding feature of the sanguinous battle in the north of France by British, American and French forces is that the first bandings were made quickly and against a minimum or resistance.

That is really significant. It means, of course, that the Germans have been taken by surprise to withstand such an attack. They are crestfallen.

The Hitlerites knew the invasion was coming. They've been telling us that they've known it for months—as who hasn't—and yesterday gave further indication that they realized it, was at hand when they ordered civilians to evacuate the great port of Marseille near the mouth of the Rhone.

With all this warning the Germans would have been armed to the teeth to defend this strategic coast if they had the wherewithal. But they lacked the men and equipment to stand off the Allies. Seven waves of infantry were put ashore on a broad front in less than two hours—an amazing feat.

This doesn't necessarily mean that Southern France is stripped of enemy forces or that there won't be hard fighting. It does mean that the 60 to 65 divisions of troops—say 750,000—upon which Hitler has depended for defence of Western Europe were but few in number the concerted Allied onslaught. About half of this force undoubtedly was flung to the fighting on the Normandy front, and scores of thousands are now Allied prisoners.

Field Marshal Henry Maitland Wilson, Supreme Allied Commander in the Mediterranean theatre, has told French people that the initial task of the invasion is "to drive out the Germans and join with the Allied armies advancing from Normandy."

This force is now investing Toulon will drive northward through the great Rhone valley. Hitler's chances of holding the line the Loire Seine and the Marne rivers, with Paris as a central anchor, are poor. Indeed, they've been fading fast under the Allied successes on the Normandy front. He will have to expedite his withdrawal to his inner fortress in Germany and.

Disaster continued to clutch tenaciously at Hitler's armies in Normandy today. The mouth of the Out-de-Seine, which is said to be round 100,000 or more Nazi troops has been narrowed to less than a dozen miles. And even if they run the gauntlet of that narrow passage of death they will encounter a deluge of bombs from the Allied air fleets which are attacking every roadway or assemblage of troops.

Thousands of Frenchmen Knew Invasion of S. France Was Coming

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 15 —(CP)— The invasion of Southern France was perhaps the worst kept secret of the war.

Thousands of Frenchmen and Allied soldiers knew it was coming. Correspondents in Normandy and Brittany were constantly asked about it both by Frenchmen and soldiers.

The question was among the first asked by Frenchmen in towns which had been captured. The French underground probably was told of the impending invasion and they told everyone else.

He flew with Hornell's sub-chasing squadron of Canso flying boats, and with the rest of the squadron was a great admirer of Canada's first Air Force ace whom they affectionately called "Pappy".

On his way home from the windswept Atlantic wastes between Greenlands and Ireland, Flight Sergeant Alex. Hillman, of Massassaga, has been on sunshine and convoy patrol duty in that area for a long time. He is a flight engineer.

Flt. Sgt. Hillman is well-known in the city. A former member of the 21st Field Battery R.C.A. here he later transferred to the Argyll Light Infantry. A mustache of more than passing ability he studied music at R.C.I. under Ross Hunter, later playing with the Argyll Band. In March, 1938, he joined the Royal Canadian Air Force and was stationed at Trenton, where he became a member of the station band.

Came the war, and he mustered into active service. He graduated as an air gunner and went on to get his qualifications as a flight engineer.

2 Youthful Cyclists Fined for Violations Of Traffic By-Laws

Sometime ago police issued warnings to local cyclists more particularly of the juvenile age regarding the observance of traffic regulations in Belleville. Apparently these warnings were unheeded because the names of no less than eight boys and girls were called in Magistrate J. L. Lloyd's court today charging the occupy with violations of traffic regulations. The cyclists, some of whom were girls, were charged with riding their bicycles along city streets after warnings without displaying rear reflectors or lights, according to the traffic regulations. Fines of one dollar and one dollar costs were imposed and paid in each case.

Traffic Chief W. Probert, who returned to duty yesterday following a two-week' vacation, said that the names of 11 more such delinquents were taken by police again last night. "There will be no further warnings without the enforcement of bicycle regulations in this city. There has been a large increase in the number of bicycles appearing on our streets and in the future those who ride bikes will have to obey the traffic regulations the same as any other person", warned police officials today.

In March 1943, he was sent to Vancouver where he flew the coast, at routes on a patrol lumber year later he was transferred to the east coast of Canada, and since has been doing submarine and convoy duty.

There he was associated with the now famous squadron of the late Flt. Lieutenant Hornell, V.C.

This Week

General Eisenhower says "we can make this week a memorable one in the history of this war, a brilliant and fruitful week for us, a fateful one for the ambitions of the Nazi tyrants."

He sees a "fleeting but definite opportunity" has been created for a major Allied victory whose consolidation will mean notable progress toward the final downfall of our enemy."

The Huns, whose experiences of the past year have been very disappointing to their master, Hitler, are familiar with defeat, retreat and being surrounded. Russia has had a large number of great victories and in the new front in the west, a little over two months old, there have been major victories and a great achievement in Allied advances in the west are gaining momentum, the Allied front is greatly extended. Swift armored columns of the Allies have harassed the enemy so that he is now caught in a trap in the Normandy area.

On the east front, Germany witnesses Russian might at its best armed for assault. In the Far East Japan has to admit such things look very bad. Admiral Nimitz has sent the war forward against Japan's empire and he has come to the opinion that the war may possibly be won without invading Japan through occupation with the necessary to insure a lasting peace. The heat is on for Japan.

News of the past days have been most cheering. It is like the days of the last part of the Great Years' War when it was said that one had to ask every morning if there were new victories were told, so many victories were being won by Britain.

The week opened momentously with the call to arms of France by de Gaulle and the Allied invasion of Southern France.

"Today All is Well"

General Sir Bernard Montgomery used a phrase in his address to the troops now fighting the Battle of France, "Today all is well." With it was another sentence which expresses what many have felt over the immensity of Allied arms in recent days, "What a change has come about in the last few weeks." And again these were his words, "Best of all, the great bulk of the German forces in Northwest Europe are in a bad way."

The General's statement was in characteristic expression and mood: "In the hot August days amidst the dust of battlefield, it is not always so easy to keep up the pressure.

"But these are momentous days and complete victory lies ahead, and this quickly, so long as we do not relent."

He went on to say "we must remember to give the honor and praise where it is due," and cited the words of the prayer of the Earl of Richmond in the battle of Bosworth Field where Richard the Third was defeated and killed:

"O Thou, Whose captain I account myself, look on my forces with a gracious eye. Make up Thine ministers of chastisement that we may praise Thee in Thy victory."

And he closed with the characteristic Montgomery word of parting, "Good luck to you all," words that are the most famous army greeting.

This is the expression of the mood of a great soldier, who leads the Allied land forces in the smashing of German power in the west. It is the language of a victorious man, who has won victory on many a field and is winning it in that vital land, France, which will have a great deal to do in the elimination of German tyranny and aggression.

Allied Leaders' Travels

Hitler's strength once stretched far, into Russia, into France, into Italy and into Norway, but Hitler never roamed from east to west or north to south of the territory his soldiers occupied for a time.

Though the aggression spread far, yet Hitler was circumscribed. He was always bound within the bounds of seized Europe and he dared not go personally to the limit of his conquests.

How different it is in the case of the free men, Roosevelt and Churchill, great travellers. As Hitler's soldiers are in flight from Western France in an effort to try and get through the net spread about them by the United Nations' armies, Hitler is living ensconced in Central Europe, while Roosevelt can visit Hawaii and Churchill can go to Italy. These Allied leaders are possessed of a great freedom, they can go far and wide for the United Nations are unicircumscribed.

Churchill and Roosevelt are the most famous of the great statesmen of history to travel far. Their travels have had a part in the campaign to smash the enemy. Their visits abroad have had very great significance, they were the heralds of great enterprise and undertakings. Where they would meet the Axis shook and weakened.

These talks and visits of the English-speaking leaders have given breadth and substance to counsel.

Germany has had none of such earth-shaking events to her credit. Churchill and Roosevelt rock the world with good news. They are able to express the freedom of the Allied nations while Hitlerism spells the narrowing influence of Hitler and the shrinking of his sway.

Synthetic Bread

(Czechoslovak Bulletin)

The quality of bread (in Czechoslovakia) is an indication of the food standard since it is the main item of consumption, in addition to potatoes since there is no meat, fish, vegetables or fruit.

Flour for bread at its best, is composed of 10 percent wheat flour, 40 percent rye, 35 percent barley or oats, and 10 percent potatoes. When it is sliced it crumbles and it is up to the housewife to make the best use of the very precious crumbs as possible. The taste and nutritive value of such bread is not difficult to imagine—hence the increase of digestive diseases throughout the occupied countries.

Chinese Pilot

(The London Times)

Flight Lieutenant Tai Hai Tan, D.F.C. of the R.A.F. volunteer pilot, has been killed in Normandy. He was known throughout the 2nd T.A.F. as "Charlie Chan," was born of Chinese parents in Singapore where he was a car salesman up to the outbreak of war.

After completing his flying training he was extremely disappointed when he was told that he was too old to be a fighter pilot.

For some time he was engaged on reconnaissance duties, and it was while carrying out such duties so brilliantly over the Arnio beachhead that he received the immediate award of a D.F.C.

Goering Versus Cassius

(Detroit Free Press)

It reports are true that Hermann Goering has denounced Hitler and is one of the plotters against him, then Der Fuehrer made a mistake in following the advice of Julius Caesar, as reported by that well known war correspondent, William Shakespeare:

"Let me have men about that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o'nights.
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous."

Health

(Boston Globe)

As one navy craft sailed out into the English Channel on the eve of D-Day, the skipper called the crew together and delivered a lecture on fear.

"Fear," he said, "is a very healthy thing."

A third-class yeoman near the front spoke up.

"Cap'n," he said, "you're looking at the healthiest sailor in the United States Navy."

JUST FOLKS

SOLDIER AND SAILOR

Jest on his lips, and song;
Grin, that is ear to ear;
Grumbling the while all long,
But marching it, never fear!
Asking no fulsome praise,
Scornful of flattery's prose.
Whether he works or plays,
Will to succeed he shows.

Sky-lanes or land or sea,
One of ten million strong
Battling, that war will be Ended ere long!
Your boy and mine as one
Serving God's cause,
Asking for this from none
Praise or applause.

How honor Joe and Jack?
Just be as brave!
Work till we get them back,
Young lives to have.
How praise each fighting son
Facing death there?
Until the war is won
Just do our share!

Pyle in Normandy:

Hedgerow Fighting is Series Of Thousands of Little Skirmishes

By ERNIE PYLE

On the Western Front — (by wireless)—I know that all of us correspondents have tried time and again to describe the kind of jittery weird hedgerow fighting in northwestern France has been like.

But I'm going to go over it once more, for we've been in it two months and some of use feel that this is the two months that broke the German Army in the west.

This type of fighting is always in small groups, so let's take as an example one company of men. Let's say they are pushing forward on both sides of a country lane, and this company is responsible for clearing the two fields on either side of the road as it advances.

That means you have only about one platoon to a field. And with the company's understrength from casualties, you might have no more than 25 or 30 men in a field.

Over here the fields are usually not more than 50 yards across and a couple of hundred yards long. They may have grain in them, or apple trees, but mostly they are just pastures of green grass, full of beautiful cows.

The fields are surrounded on all sides by immense hedgerows which consist of an ancient earthen bank, waist high, all matted with roots, and out of which grow seeds, bushes, and trees up to 20 feet high.

The Germans have used these barriers well. They put snipers in the trees. They dig deep trenches behind the hedgerows and cover them with timber, so that it is almost impossible for artillery to get at them.

Sometime they will prop up machine guns with strings attached, so that from over the hedge without getting out of their holes. They even cut a section of the hedgerow and hide a big gun or a tank in it, covering it with brush.

Also they tunnel under the hedgerows from the back and make the opening on the forward side just large enough to stick a machine gun through.

But mostly the hedgerow pattern is this: a heavy machine gun hidden at each end of the field and infantrymen hidden all along the hedgerow with rifles and machine pistols.

* * *

Now it's up to us to dig them out of there. It's a slow and cautious business, and there is nothing very dashing about it. Our men don't go across the open fields in dramatic charges such as you see in the movies. They did at first, but they learned better.

They go in tiny groups, a squad or less, moving yards apart and sticking close to the hedgerow on either end of the field. They creep a few yards, squat, wait, then creep again.

If you could be right up there between the Germans and the American you wouldn't see very many men at any one time—just a few here and there, always trying to keep hidden. But you would hear lots of small arms fire.

Our men were taught in training not to fire until they saw something at which to shoot. But as it worked in this country, because you see so little. So the alternative is to keep shooting constantly at the hedgerows. That gives the Germans in their holes while we sneak up on them.

The attacking squads sneak up the sides of the hedgerows while the rest of the platoon stay back in their own hedgerow and keep the forward hedge saturated with bullets. They shoot rifle grenades too, and a mortar squad a little farther back keeps lobbing mortar shells over onto the Germans.

The little skirmish groups get up to the far ends of the hedgerows at the corners of the field. They have to sprint out into the machine guns at each corner. They do this with hand grenades, rifle grenades and machine guns.

* * *

Usually, when the pressure gets on, the German defenders of the hedgerow start pulling back. They'll take their better guns and most of the men back a few fields and start digging in for a new line.

They leave about two machine guns and a few men scattered through the hedge, to do a lot of shooting and then to run. Americans as long as they can.

Our men now sneak along the fronts of the hedgerow, throwing grenades over ontil the other side and spraying the hedges with their guns. The fighting is very close-cmbat a few yards apart—but it is seldom actual hand-to-hand stuff.

Sometimes the remaining Germans come out of their holes with their hands high, all matted with roots to run for it and are mowed down. Sometimes they wait one last shot, and a hand grenade, thrown into their hole, finishes them off.

MAIN STREET

THIS is Main Street somewhere in Europe.

These shattered buildings were once busy shops and offices.

The rubble-strewn sidewalks were once thronged with people. It will be a busy street again . . . someday.

The ravaged cities of Europe and Asia must be rebuilt. When VDay comes the world will look to Canadian factories and farms for materials of reconstruction and repair, for food and clothing and household goods . . .

In the face of such a need, is it conceivable that we should have idle hands or minds in Canada after the war? Canada will be a busy place when Victory is won.

An unknown entrant, Freddie Annon, 30-year-old war-worker from Mamaroneck N. Y., set the pace in the first round yesterday of the 1944 National Pro Golfers Association tournament at Spokane, Wash., when he led the classy field with a 4-under-par 66. Trailing with 68s were Byron Nelson of Toledo, former champion; President Ed Dudley of the P. G. A. from Colorado Springs and Morris Gravett, Williamsport, Pa., Harold (Jug) McSpaden of Philadelphia, leading winner of the year, posted a 70 while Craig Wood, duration titleholder, was way back with a 74. Otto Dutra of Los Angeles could do no better than 78.

A new sprint champion loomed from Trinidad when, at an impromptu colonial Olympiad at Georgetown, British Guiana, yesterday, George Lewis, a policeman from that colony, dashed the 100 yards in a reported 9 2-5 seconds, equaling the world record.

Former N. B. A. worlds' featherweight champion, Phil Terranova of New York, took a 10-round beating last night at Providence at the hands of Vince Dell 'Orto of Philadelphia. After the official engagement, a fistic display developed when Bobby Gleason, Terranova's manager, punched referee Tim Perrick and was suspended.

Toronto, Aug. 15 —(CP)—Johnny Longden, tough little Alberta-born jockey, will have to be practically nailed down in the coffin before he gives up the chance to ride a winner in an important stake race.

Commenting on Longden's winning ride on First Fiddle in the Butler handicap with a broken foot, Harry (Calgary Albertan) Scott recalled he did nearly the same thing in the 1934 Alberta Derby. That time Johnny rode Peashooter to victory even though he had broken his leg the day before the race.

The Outdoors Life:

Jim Hallton, Vancouver sportsman and outdoors lover, has plans to popularize the outdoors life in British Columbia after the war. He wants to take hold of the youngsters and conduct regular classes in handling firearms, looking after fishing paraphernalia, and the lore of woodcraft.

Here and There:

Truly a ball umpire's lot is none too happy nowadays, with always the danger he may lose his job to non-union track labor. That Winnipeg ump, who dared an obstreperous fan to come down and do a better job if he could, learned the hard way when the fan actually came down on the field to take over the play-calling duties. Only the vigilance of league officials saved the day for the ump and deprived the fans of some rare sport . . . Jack Johnsen of Calgary laid one buck on the line for the handicap mare Cafe Donna three years ago when she was an uninspiring three-year-old. She's been a consistent winner in three seasons since then and this summer won over $1,000 in purses—a rather neat interest return on Johnsen's investment . . .

Armed Services Football League In the Making

Toronto, Aug. 15 (CP)—Jim Coleman says today in the Toronto Globe and Mail that although there has been no official announcements yet, a service men's senior amateur football league has been formed in Ontario. He said five teams will enter the league, namely the three R.C.A.F. teams from Toronto, Trenton, St. Thomas and Hagersville.

Coleman added that the withdrawal of Toronto Navy from the Ontario Rugby Football Union senior series came on "instructions from Ottawa" and that the O.R.F.U. has been "scuppered" by the brass hats in Ottawa."

PIRATES, REDS NOW BATTLING FOR 2ND PLACE

Teams Now Tied for Position With Pirates Having Best of Schedule

CARDS ARE "IN"

By JACK HAND
Associated Press Sport Writer

Lost in the shuffle of St. Louis Cardinals' march to the top toward a Labor Day flag clinching, Pittsburgh Pirates and Cincinnati Reds today were locked in a second-place scrap that had all the earmarks of a battle royal.

Tied for runner-up spot and second dough in the World Series split, the Pirates and Reds had the field all to themselves, running from first place St. Louis to fourth place Chicago.

Pittsburgh took two decisions from Boston Braves yesterday, a regularly scheduled game behind Preacher Roe's one-hit shutout, 5-0, after Rip Sewell had hurled them a 12-inning 7-6 win in a "suspended" game held over from a 5-3 8th-inning tie on July 2. Red Barrett in the nightcap was the hero.

Cincinnati couldn't help themselves from being tied for second with Pittsburgh after a double-header, stopping New York, 6-3 as Bucky Walters became the first National league pitcher to win 17.

Mort Cooper protected the Cards' 17 - game lead by relieving nine Brooklyn hits for a 4-2 St. Louis triumph over Hal Gregg. The Cardinals' margin is now 12 games out of Chicago's second-place assignment after the Cubs' double-header outpitching Les Fleming, 6-1.

Philadelphia Phillies continued to do his best to east the pain of Ted Hughson's departure by trimming Chicago White Sox in two, 5-1, edge over St. Louis Browns, New York pounded out the last big tag to trim Chicago, 2-1, in 13 innings. Nick Etten saved the champs' from a shutout with a ninth-inning homer and Johnny Sindelar's double and Chicago error gave Ernie Bonham the overtime victory. Detroit's visit by the Athletics to a 7-5 night game verdict and Washington's rout over Cleveland for the third successive time, 8-5 with Al Carrasquel winning and Steve Cromek losing.

CASUAL COMMENT
by K.J.C.

The teacher had been giving a lesson on the use of the word "immaterial," and to discover what the children had learned asked them to bring some article to school demonstrating the word.

Next day she said to one bright youth, "Now, Johnny, show me what you have brought."

"Well", said Johnny, rising, "will you please hold this stick tightly at both ends?"

Having done this, the teacher inquired what was to be done next.

"Which end?" asked the teacher.

Wait, Folks

Under a two column box heading "WAIT, FOLKS"—"The Game's Not Over Yet"—; a really good sports editorial appeared in "BOOM" published by the United States Marines at Parris Island, S.C., recently. To add strikingness to the article appears the picture of a catcher, standing with his mask in hand held aloft while making his speech to the unseen audience. We give you the articles—"WAIT, FOLKS"—"The Game's Not Over Yet"—which goes as follows:

"Sure, we know it's the last half of the ninth inning; we're still four to 0, there's one down and nobody on base.

But there are two dangerous batters to come up—and a ball game is never over until the last man is out, particularly in this final game of the World's Series.

Mussolini was easy—pop fly to the shortstop. Remember the ump even chased him out of the park. Hitler he squawked so loud, Things looked rosy then and a shutout with the end of the grandstand and started filtering out.

It was all over but the shouting —that's what you thought, and some of you haven't changed your minds yet. But you're wrong, believe me.

So let's stop the splits a moment and let me tell you what the picture looks like from a players' standpoint. Germany's at bat, a careful, cunning hitter with plenty of experience in the big leagues. He doesn't bite on the bad pitches, and ways waits for the easiest ball to smack.

After Germany comes Japan, the most cruel, dirtiest player in the league. He'll do anything to get on base. Remember back in the seventh inning when he spiked the second baseman on that sneak steal?

It's been a hard, rough game, and we've had to make lots of replacements. And never forget this one important fact—we're playing AWAY BALL PARK.

So keep your seats up there in the grandstand, and keep cheering for the team every minute by working hard at whatever your job may be.

We can hold our slender lead if we know you're really behind us. that you're doing your part.

I've got to get back in the game now—Germany's pretty nervous over this delay—but let me leave this tip from an old-timer:

Never let the players see you leaving the ball park before the last man is out; never let them sense your feeling that "it's all over but the shouting."

Lesson No. 69

By SAM GORDON

The Editor

The bidding should go like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 S	2 H
2 S	4 S
4 NT	5 S
5 H or T.N	Pass

A two-in-suit opening shows enough for game. If partner has no extra trick, he doesn't help for game. He makes a negative response; type no-trump.

If partner has a sure trick, he admits help for slam. He makes a positive response; any bid except two no-trump. The three heart reply to two spades was a positive response.

In answer to four no-trump, five hearts is the signal for one ace and one king. But how does south know the best trump suit is hearts? Because on evenly divided trump suit plays best. The longer suit is then used for discarding purposes, for how that works here.

With seven trumps, a south diamond must be lost. With hearts trumps, all the north diamonds can be discarded on the spades. Thus, the south diamond can be trumped in dummy, for a grand slam.

It's nice work if you can get it.

"Sahara"

Columbia's epic of desert warfare, "Sahara," starring Humphrey Bogart and is now showing at the Capitol Theatre, was filmed entirely in a spot in the Imperial Valley Desert, which is 200 feet below sea level. Just two miles away is the Salton Sea, which is 244 feet below sea level. Needless to say, the actors in the cast spent many uncomfortable days and were actually almost as worn out as they look in most of the scenes in the picture.

The location of "Sahara" was the lowest level at which a picture has been made since the filming of "Cruze" days ago by Death Valley, which is 366 feet below sea level. Death Valley and the Salton Sea are the second and third lowest spots on earth. The first is the Dead Sea, which is down to the suffocating depth of 1400 feet.

"The Sullivans," Fenmy

20th Century-Fox brings to the screen the heart-warming human story of the family of the year in the film of the year, the Sullivans," now in its final day at the Belle Theatre.

Anne Baxter and Thomas Mitchell head the featured cast, with Edward Ellis, John Campbell, James Cardwell, John Alvin and George Offerman, Jr., portraying the five famous Sullivan boys of Waterloo, Iowa. Selena Royle and Trudy Marshall also have featured roles.

The film was directed by Lloyd Bacon and produced by Sam Jaffe, with Robert T. Kane as associate producer. It is from a screen play from the story by Edward Doherty and Jules Schermer.

Despite the importance of their roles, Bruce Lloyd Bacon decided not to seek recognized actors to represent the Sullivan boys. Instead, he felt, would bring a greater quality of sincerity and effectiveness. The search for these new faces covered the continent and lasted more than six months. Finally, three sets of actors were needed to portray the boys from childhood to manhood.

The Canadian News of the Day and a Terrytoon color cartoon will be contained in this screen program.

"Song of Russia," Romantic Drama Showing

Susan Peters added another facet to her crown when she was awarded the prize feminine lead role opposite Robert Taylor in the Joseph Pasternak production of "Song of Russia." Gregory Ratoff directed the M-G-M picture.

Miss Peters, whose meteoric rise to screen prominence was climaxed by her nomination for the Academy Award last year on the strength of her role in "Random Harvest", was recently seen in "Young Ideas." In "Song of Russia" she portrays a young Russian girl who meets and marries American symphony conductor Taylor during his concert tour of Russia. Her characterization is highly dramatic and the most important of her career.

She and Taylor head a cast comprised of Michael Chekhov, Robert Benchley, Felix Bressart, Darryl Hickman, John Hodiak and Jacqueline White.

Roosevelt Says Japan Cannot Be Trusted

Bremerton, Wash., Aug. 15 (AP) — President Roosevelt gave his solemn assurance here Saturday that never again would the Japanese attack the United States, as they did to start another Pacific war.

Mr. Roosevelt spoke less than an hour after the destroyer had docked, bringing him from Alaska on the last leg of a Pacific tour of inspection that had taken him from Canada to the Hawaiian Islands, north to the Aleutians, through the Bering Sea and what the Japanese call their "sphere of influence," and back to the Puget Sound navy yard here, where he made his report to the American people.

Twenty thousand shipyard workers and naval personnel were his immediate audience. In his broadcast speech Mr. Roosevelt told his hearers:

"The word and honor of Japan cannot be trusted."

He told of his conference with Pacific war leaders at Honolulu where he "compiled a record both in the words exchanged and in the spoken and unspoken attitudes of those present to the best method for its solution," he reached.

The speech throughout indicated determination that the defences of the Aleutians, Alaska and British Columbia must be so strong in the future that no possible aggressor dare attempt to disturb the peace of the continent from the Antarctic to the Arctic Circle.

Floyd Bevens won one game and then lost five as the start of the International League season. Then the right-handed Newark pitcher decided to hit the comeback trail. He's now won ten straight.

In beating Rochester last night, 3-2, Floyd accounted for his 11th victory as the Bears kept pace with the second place Baltimore Orioles in the red hot International League race.

Montreal Royals all but had a game won until Rochester, seven runs behind, scored eight runs in the last three innings and spoiled the game out of the fire, 9-8.

Buffalo exploded 16 runs on 18 hits to smother Syracuse Chiefs, who pushed over all of their six runs in the seventh inning. Mayo Smith, League's leading batter, Oscar Dentino and Jim Levy all shoved home runs in the 16-6 slaughter.

Ken Brondell strengthened his position of league leading winning percentage as he downed Jersey City to 4-3 decision over Toronto on the first game, while Joe Kreuz went all the way for the Leafs. GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 12

Encouraged by Clyde's reassurance Jeanne let the house key go enough to walk to the station. She had no idea where she was going or what she was getting into, but she relied implicitly in her friend's promise that F. B. I. men would be following along to take care of her.

It was frightening to realize she was being used as bait in a plan to trap a group engaged in Nazi activities, but she was glad at the same time of the opportunity to be of that much service.

And she had something they didn't—a protective guard hovering over her, ready to dash to her rescue at the first sign of real trouble.

"It's very little to do, considering what Max will soon be facing when he goes overseas," she told herself.

Envelope.

She had looked at the sealed envelope the man had handed her a dozen times. It had come into her possession, but she could find no clue as to whom she was to deliver it.

As Clyde suggested, she probably would be picked up by some one who would give her more detailed instructions about where to find the mysterious "Mr. Brewster."

That was smart on the part of the gang, she thought, as she walked along. They were taking no chances on the message going astray until she knew she wasn't being followed.

She laughed little to herself at the thought of the F. B. I. had her under observation — and were so clever about it that not once had she seen anyone she believed to be her protector.

At the station she paid for her ticket and her chair car reservation with a twenty-dollar bill, the first of the $500 which she had found stuffed in the pocket of her jacket when she was at the Norwoods for dinner.

She was just putting the change in her purse when she heard her name, and looked up to see Max Wardwell standing at her.

"Well, Jeanne, are you going into the city too?" the girl asked.

"How nice. We can have lunch and the trip won't be so boring. Have you a chair car seat?"

Jeanne answered that she had.

"Good," Lucia went on. "I'll get me, too, and we'll sure be together."

Travel Alone

Jeanne would have preferred to make the trip by herself. She had never liked Lucia from the first time she had met her, and her dislike had been intensified when Mrs. Ward's niece had badly denied their rings were alike.

But now Lucia seemed to want to be friendly, and there was no way she could elude her even if she wished.

A sudden thought came to her. Lucia and her ring. Perhaps Lucia was the one who was to give her the information regarding delivery of the ring. This apparently accidental meeting probably had been carefully planned in advance. In which case she had no chance of eluding the girl.

Lucia was wearing gloves and Jeanne couldn't be sure whether she was wearing her ring or not. Perhaps she would get a chance in the train to see.

But when Lucia removed her gloves on the train, she was wearing no jewelry at all. Neither did she mention anything during the ride that suggested she had "Mr. Brewster," or was connected with his letter.

Instead she kept up an almost ceaseless chatter about what she had been doing the parties at Ward Park, new people she had met, an unending flow of gossip about people of whom Jeanne had never heard or barely met.

Able to relax.

She found she was able to relax under the barrage of talk as all she had to do to keep it going was to murmur an occasional yes or no, and Lucia was off on a tangent.

Jeanne wondered if she had been right in thinking that Lucia was a member of the subversive group after all. It seemed to her that she definitely would be a dangerous person to trust with information about the way she talked.

"When a person talks so much, she must eventually say something she doesn't intend to," the girl thought.

But as the conversation rolled on and all proved of utterly no consequence, she began to wonder whether Lucia really was rattle-brained or very clever. Then she amused herself looking around the car and trying to spot the F. B. I. man who had her in charge.

There was one lone suspicious man she finally settled upon simply because he was so common-place. He wasn't a person that anyone would ever look at more than once. Having looked he would promptly be forgotten. No one would ever suspect him of being a decitve.

Despite Dr. Clyde's assurance that she was being well looked after, she didn't have a feeling of confidence to actually see the person entrusted with the job.

Her confidence, however, was shaken when the man "she had picked out" left the train suddenly from his seat as the train slowed for a station. He walked off, picked up his hand bag and left the car. She looked out the window and saw him hurry to greet a boy, a tall man and saw him walk away just as the train started up again.

She laughed at herself, then, by two clever for her, she decided.

As she turned to bid goodbye to Lucia at the station, the other girl flatly refused to let her go.

"Of course, we're not saying goodbye—we're going to my apartment," she insisted. "We have a place here. We'll keep all the time. Aunty never uses it more than once a year or so, but she insists on having a place come to she. She hates hotels. We're plenty of room and you might as well spend the night there."

"That I have a date," Jeanne protested.

Has a Date.

"Was your date going to meet you at the station?"

"Well—of course, I guess not." The girl's eyes went quickly about the platform to see if anyone was coming towards her, or if she could see anyone with a ring like hers.

"Come on then. You can freshen up at my place and then get in touch with your date."

When Jeanne still protested, Lucia took her firmly by the arm and led her to a taxi. She gave the driver an address and the cab rolled away.

A maid admitted the girls to the apartment and greeted Lucia cordially. Apparently she had been informed in advance that she was coming and the place was shining as though it had been just recently dusted and gone over.

Lucia led Jeanne to a room which she said was hers for as long as she wished to stay. There was an adjoining bath, one of the most luxurious Jeanne had ever seen, and she was glad of a chance to freshen up after her dusty train ride.

The room was beautifully furnished and might very easily have been transplanted from the Ward mansion near Shelton.

There was no doubt that Dr. Clyde's practice in the Ward wealth was true in every respect, and this apartment, which Lucia admitted was often used, proved that the girl didn't stint on spending for their own comfort.

Looks Closer.

She glanced casually at the envelope, and then looked closer. Where it had been perfectly blank before an address now was showing faintly. Even as she looked it seemed to turn darker before her eyes.

Evidently, the address had been there all the time, written in some secret ink which developed for a time and later took on color.

There was no name on the envelope, just the address. She remembered the name the man had told her—Mr. Brewster. This was where she would find him — 1053 North Rebel Boulevard.

She memorized the address and put the letter back in her purse, and then went into the bathroom looking for Lucia. Perhaps she could tell her how to reach Rebel Boulevard.

Lucia wasn't in the living room, however and Jeanne went into the hall and called to her. There was no answer. That was funny, she thought. If she had gone out, she surely would have said something about it in advance.

She found a closed door and knocked. When there was no answer she turned the knob and felt for the light switch. It was another bedroom much like the one to which she had been shown, but there was no Lucia. There was no sign of Lucia either there or in the bathroom.

Jeanne went through three other rooms in the place and finally reached the kitchen. Perhaps the maid could tell her about the address. But there was no one in the kitchen, either. The apartment was entirely vacant except for herself.

Confused, she was standing in the centre of the living room when she heard a phone ring. A man's voice asked for Lucia, and Jeanne answered that she had gone out.

There were no questions, and the phone clicked at the other end of the wire before she could ask any herself.

She sat down, trying to puzzle out of the mystery of Lucia's sudden disappearance. She hadn't said anything about going right out when they arrived at the place. And where was the maid?

She had no intent on the problem that the doorbell had rung several times before she was conscious of it. Perhaps it was Lucia. She might have stepped out for a moment and forgotten her key.

But when Jeanne threw open the door, it was to confront Capt. Max Bennett. The smile on his face froze and then gave way to an expression of astonishment.

"Jeanne!" he cried. "The world are you doing here?"

He pushed past her and came into the apartment. She shut the door and followed.

"I might ask you the same question, Max," she said, shakily. She was as surprised as he was.

Max's face now reflected anger. He apparently was furious.

"What kind of a game is this, anyway?" he demanded. "What are you standing me up for, that Clyde person?"

No Game

"It — isn't any kind of a game, Max. Didn't Kay tell you that I was unexpectedly called away and couldn't see you tonight?"

"She said you weren't at home — that you had a hot date in Chicago. Honey, I'm glad to know I'm not accustomed to being made a fool of. You might at least have phoned me at camp and let me know."

"I'm awfully sorry, Max," the girl said contritely. "Kay must've grossed, or at least she didn't give you my message. I told her to tell you I had a business appointment that came up suddenly. The Mrs. Ward date Jeanne was her own idea, apparently. And as for phoning you, I did, but just missed you. They said you had left."

Max suddenly grinned.

"Okay, I forgive you — this time."

"How did you know that I was here?" Jeanne demanded. "I certainly didn't tell Kay, because I didn't know I was coming here until I met Lucia on the train and she insisted on bringing me to her apartment."

"I might say it was intuition," Max grinned, "but I'll be honest. When I found out you were gone, I phoned Lucia. I learned she was up here, so I hustled back to camp. I remembered that one of the officers was flying to Chicago at 8, and I got him to give me a ride with him and here I am. I came to the apartment as you weren't available. I had to have someone to tell my troubles to.

"However, now that I've stumbled onto your hideout, we'll just forget my plans and go stepping. I don't have to be back until morning. Come on, sweetie, let's up the town."

Appointment.

"I'm sorry, Max, but I can't do it. I still have to keep my business appointment."

"Okay, I'll keep it with you. When you're finished, we'll go out and look for excitement."

"I just can't do it, Max — really. I'm very sorry , but that's the way it is. I've made other arrangements."

The captain looked at first as though he thought Jeanne wanted to be persuaded, but when he realized that she meant it he became angry again.

"Okay, I can take a hint. You don't want to see me. Who is it, your famous Dr. Clyde?"

"Max, please. I can't tell you any more than that."

And I thought I was going to give you this tonight," he said, bitterly.

"Oh, Max." Jeanne was saying, when the outer door suddenly opened and Lucia Ward walked in.

"Hello, Max!" the girl greeted him. "What are you doing here?"

The young officer's anger became flippant.

"Here catch," he said, and tossed the ring at Lucia. She caught it in her cupped hands.

"What's the meaning of this?" she demanded.

"A bit of thought and hope went into the buying of that little bauble, but it's worth less than useless now. Keep it if you like."

Max stalked toward the door, opened it and went out without a backward glance. His shoulders were squared and seemed very stiff from the back.

Smile.

Lucia turned to Jeanne and smiled.

"Well the boy friend seems to be in quite a huff. What's wrong with him?"

"Oh, he was angry when I said I couldn't go out with him — that I had another engagement."

Lucia examined the ring carefully and seemed to weigh it in her hand.

"He gave it to you."

"He was very foolish. He'll be sorry for his grand gesture in a little while and don't know how to get himself out of this mess. You take the ring—he intended it for you."

Little Benny's Note Book

I was reading my lyberry book on the living room floor and ma called down from her room, saying, Benny bring me up a glass of ice water?

Do you mean right now, ma? I called back, and ma said, Did you hear what I said?

Meaning exactly right now, and I went and got a glass and took it up to her, saying, Here it is, ma, I bet you didn't expect to see it so quick, did you?

It's a wonder I'm seeing it at all, with your peculiar system of obedience whenever I ask you to do something, ma said in my day we were accustomed to obey our parents like the proverbial jack in the box instead of breaking into a preliminary flood of why when and wherefor, she said, and I said, Well we do, ma, I'll reform. You'll be surprised the next time you ask me to do something. I said.

I'll be able to test the proof of the pudding in a very few minutes, because I think I'll have to send you around the corner for some white thread, ma said.

Giving me a idea, and I went out of the room and quick struck back again and got in ma's closit, ma not seeing me on account of her back being turned and not hearing me on account of the noise of her sewing machine, and after a while ma called me and I quick jumped out of the closit and took my surplus her and partly to get more air to breathe, telling, Here I am, here I am.

You crazy silly senseless thing, are you trying to frighten me out of a year's growth? ma said, and I said, No ma'am, you just said you wanted me to act like a jack in the box, didn't you, ma?

I didn't mean literlly for land sakes, ma said. Now I can't even think of what I meant you for. Suck a boy, oh dear. Get out of my sight this instant, ma said, and I said, Yes ma'am.

Proving it's probably a good idea to just leave your children act natural.

Number R.A.F. Bombs Falls Behind Canadians Causing Casualties

By ROBERT C. WILSON
(AP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian army in France, Aug. 15.—(AP)— R. A. F. heavy bombers dropped a number of explosives behind the Canadian lines in yesterday's assault on German positions causing (four words censored) casualties (23 words censored).

With the 1st Canadian army in France, Aug. 15.—(CP Cable)—A ferocious attack by 700 British heavy bombers attacking enemy positions in the Falaise area yesterday dropped their bombs behind the Canadian lines killing and injuring some troops.

It was the second time in five days that Allied aircraft had caused damage and casualties behind their own lines. On Aug. 8 Maj.-Gen. B. M. Kellerin of Kelowna, B. C., commander of the 3rd Canadian Division, was wounded by shrapnel when a formation of U. S. heavy bombers dropped a group of fragmentation bombs short into the Canadian area.

The bombs dropped Monday hit about four miles off their objective, the dining room in fields and orchards where troops and vehicles were parked.

The explosives fell as far back as Villers Jad Canada. The result was the halting of some flights of bombers while others were back with their bombs undropped, but a senior Canadian officer said that 80 per cent of the bombs fell at the right target.

The error occurred a short time after United States heavy bombers were involved in a similar mistake on this front (eight words censored).

CHURCHILL SEES TROOPS SET OUT

Rome, Aug. 15. (AP)—The invasion of southern France permitted the discovery today that the main purpose of Prime Minister Churchill's visit to Italy was to be here for final preparations of the operation.

Canadians in Battle?

New York, Aug. 15 —(CP)— The Spanish radio (Radio Nacional) said today that one of the first Allied landing craft to arrive on the beach in Southern France "was loaded with Canadian and French soldiers." There was no Allied confirmation of the report.

The first landing craft reached the beach under fire from French guns 2 a.m. E.D.T.) and that "two hours later, 2,000 men from seven transport ships set foot on France."

"By 1 p.m. 15,000 soldiers of Gen. Wilson had landed in the area. The German security troops had begun to react," said the broadcast, emphasizing the importance of the reported landing of Canadian troops because they have been used to spearhead the first landing barge "was loaded with Canadian and French soldiers."

Germans Say "Supreme Hour Has Struck"

The change in the command setup took place immediately upon Gen. Eisenhower's arrival in France more than a week ago.

Brantford, Aug. 15 —(CP)— The gates of the Grand River Valley Dam at Shand will be opened at midnight, Wednesday, it was announced, releasing 377,500,000 gallons in ten hours in an effort to flush the river and raise its water level from about, 11 to 13 inches, E. G. Hall, of the Grand River Valley commission said today.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 15 —(CP)— The war news failed to impress the Toronto market and only insignificant changes were recorded in stocks. The gold shares were slightly higher and the base metals and west of the exchange hour. Turnover was 373,000 shares up till 1 pm.

Cochenour Willans was feature of the gold group, trading in volume at a gain of 9 cents to 2.30. Other group golds were Pamour, 2cb; Hughes, Pickle Crow, Beattie, Negus, Preston, Sullivan and Teck Hughes 5cb and Preston 1cb.

Noranda and Falconbridge showed strength and other base metals including Labrador, Steep Rock and Nickel, were down.

Oil, golds and paper issues improved slightly, senior oils were lower and others mainly unchanged. C.P.R. sold down to 12, off 1%, on the news that no dividend would be voted at this stage. British Dominion, down 5 cents to 2.10, was the weak issue of the Western Oil list.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Aug. 15 (AP)—Mild selling continued to cloud the general direction of today's stock market and, while scattered features attracted bids, numerous leaders lacked rising power. Trade was cheering but provided a further argument for speculative caution to prevent conservatism on the idea the end of the European conflict might be approaching.

Rao Motors touched a peak for 1944 ahead most of the time were Graham-Paige, Hupp Motors, Chrysler, Sears, U.S. Rubber, R. K. Reins, Sinclair Oil, Anaconda, Kennecott and American Can.

Eight-Pound Pike Gives Four At Oak Lake Thrill

Mighty chests heaving with exercise, the four members of the lunch boat manners, pulled the diminutive dinghy across the wind-swept waste of Oak Lake. Astern trailed four trolling lines. Came a jerk the kind that is usually associated with fish and fishing lines) and the boat spun dizzily through the cloud of whirling spray loomed a figure, fishing in the boat he reared, jaws set, and pulling on a line like Fred Lewis in a tug-of-war team.

While his companions looked on in admiration and awe, the mighty Ollie Duff, hero of many a piscatorial conquest slowly hauled in his finny victim.

And there were tears of joy glistening in the eyes of the eight-pound pike, as he slowly settled on his family, that lay still in death in the bottom of the Duff corvette. He murmured gently as he gilled his last breath. "Ol' Lite's long filing I've had enough content I die to be (ate) by Duff".

Others of the ships' crew that took part in the kill of eight pike were not – so-abled-bodied-seamen, Bruce Lattimer, Frank Hitchon and M. Anatey.

Working with a British Division in Italy, Canadian tankmen led the Allied advance through rough country in the Arno River sector in Italy, smashing the crack Hermann Goering Division and sending them reeling back in retreat. Seeks Friends in This District Of Mrs. Maggs Who Is Detained By Japs in Concentration Camp

Languishing in a Japanese concentration camp in Shanghai are Captain and Mrs. Maggs. Captain Maggs, previous to the outbreak of war was port captain at Ning-Po and in the service of the Chinese Maritime Customs.

Somewhere in the environs of Belleville are relatives or friends of Mrs. Maggs. They are urgently required to get in touch with Mr. Samuel Wolfe, former general manager of the T. T. Fulford Company, Brockville and Toronto, at Shanghai, and now holidaying at "The Manor" at Picton. Mr. Wolfe's home address is 503 Annandale Apartments, Kingston, where he will be in residence after August 31st.

Captain Maggs and his wife visited friends in this district several years ago, and Mrs. Maggs was on her way to this city with several trunks of belongings when war broke out in the Far East. She got as far as Manila, where she was seen by Mr. Wolfe, but later was returned by the enemy to Shanghai where she is in a concentration camp at the present time.

Mr. Wolfe, in Shanghai when war broke out, left with other British and Canadian residents for home by way of Manila. A few days after his arrival he met Mrs. Maggs while sitting in a Manila hotel. She had been sent home to Belleville, with many of their belongings by her husband. She had followed Mr. Wolfe to Manila on a subsequent boat.. But the enemy had other ideas. The "foreigners" were sent to Santa Thomas concentration camp. Mr. Wolfe, after a stay of 28 hours, was released on account of his age, but ordered to report to the camp daily. Here he saw Mrs. Maggs on several occasions, but on his last trip to the camp he was informed that she had been returned to a concentration camp in Shanghai where her husband was interned.

Mr. Wolfe, who is seventy-five years of age, represented his company in Shanghai for the past 40 years as Far Eastern manager. At present he is the assistant general manager, and is holidaying at Picton. Prior to going to the Far East he was company manager in South Africa going there when he was but 20 years of age. He is Irish, being born in the city of Cork, and is a past-president of the Shanghai Rotary Club.

Any information regarding the whereabouts of the friends or relatives of Mrs. (Captain) Maggs will be greatly appreciated by Mr. Wolfe.

3 Minesweepers' Crews of R.C.N. On Long Leave

An East Coast Canadian Port, Aug. 14—(CP)—Vanguards of the invasion of fortress Europe, crew members of three hard-slugging little minesweepers of the Royal Canadian Navy left today for long leaves, their first in many months.

Arriving here over the weekend, they had many stories to tell of those first fateful weeks off the coast of France.

The men were from HMCS Bayfield, Thunder, and Cinas, pocket-size fighting ships of the Bangor class, part of an invasion force of more than 100 Canadian craft, and they considered themselves mighty lucky to get back.

With 70 per cent casualties predicted among the Canadian minesweeping flotillas, the Camucks escaped almost scot-free—perhaps one officer suggested, they were too small a target to shoot at. But they had lots of action. The Canso ran back and forth clearing minefields while overhead blazing long range coastal guns from the Cherbourg fortress dueled with fire-bicching British and American warships.

Thunder, like cikes operating with an Allied minersweeping force, also took part in the siege of Cherbourg. Bayfield, lurking dashingly to mark mine-cleared lanes with an all-Canadian flotilla, ran close to the French shore and chalked up 72 miles in one night, and nearly 150 in the first 72 hours of D-day.

And now they are back, their only casualties men from Bayfield who got over-enthusiastic and swam ashore to settle private scores with Jerry—and stepped on a high-explosive land mine.

ALL INITIAL OBJECTIVES HAVE BEEN TAKEN MOST OF GERMAN ARMOR ESCAPES FROM TRAP

Front Reported Now Lengthened To 120 Miles

Tank Battles in Progress Between Toulon and Cannes

Rome, Aug. 16 —(AP)— Allied Headquarters said tonight that its troops are firmly established in Southern France with all initial objectives taken. Airborne British and American troops were credited with successfully blocking enemy reinforcements.

Allied invasion troops drove steadily into Southern France from secure beachheads, still meeting only negligible German opposition, as convoys poured a constant stream of reinforcements ashore.

The operations are proceeding "according to plan," Allied Headquarters announced.

11,000 French Sailors in Action.

(From Allied landings were declared in Berlin dispatches to Stockholm to have lengthened the front of 120 miles, from the French naval base of Toulon to San Remo, Italian port and winter resort, 84 miles southwest of Genoa. Tank battles were reported in progress midway between Toulon and Cannes. While Germans said heavy fighting had developed for an airfield north of St. Raphael.

(A Transocean broadcast from Berlin said Germans have had to loosen up harbor installations at Nice, Cannes, and St. Raphael, as all likely spots for attack.

(The BBC said one of its correspondents had been as far as 20 miles behind Cannes with French parachute troops. "His broadcast was recorded by NBC, said 12,000 French sailors were participating in the invasion.)

Although details of this new thrust against Hitler's Europe were cloaked in official silence, it became known that the French port of 31 miles southwest of Nice, and Cap Negre, 25 miles east of Toulon, were two of the points where the thousands of assault troops, mainly American and French, began going ashore yesterday morning.

The first communique announcing the invasion said British troops also were used in the assault, but it was believed most of the British were air-borne. A BBC report yesterday said the bulk of the invasion forces were French.

Dispatches from correspondents referred to three separate Allied beachheads, but the location of a third was not disclosed. Stephen Barlay, Associated Press war correspondent, said the landings covered a 40-mile stretch of the coast. By Air Attacks Vital.

Another dispatch said the Germans began some heavy shelling, forcing landing craft to hit the beaches behind dense smoke screens.

In general, however, reports indicated opposition on this second Allied invasion front was much less than anticipated. No air attacks had yet been made against the landing parties.

The Mediterranean Allied air forces, which yesterday broke all previous records for one day's individual flying time in the theatre, still were holding a protecting cover over the ground troops this morning in great force.

Air activity during the night included a raid on the Rhone Valley airdrome in the Rhone Valley. By dawn Allied and German communications leading to the battle area were battered virtually without letup.

Three enemy aircraft were destroyed in operations in the last 24 hours and 20 Allied planes were lost.

Allied Headquarters in Italy in the way of definite naval news from the assault area on the southern coast of France," said a naval communique, "steady building up of the army by the Allied navies is proceeding smoothly... The work continues by night as well as by day."

The announcement that reinforcements were moving in relentlessly in itself evidenced that the areas along the coast were firmly in Allied hands.

(German broadcasts acknowledged beachheads were established at three points and that glider troops were pouring in. The enemy broadcasts said Nice and Marseilles were under fire, and asserted Allied bombs failed to knock out German coastal batteries.

In an early afternoon report, the German propaganda agency, International Information Bureau, declared the Allies had been able to land armor only in the Bay of St. Tropez, 15 airline miles south along the coast from Frejus. This report said Americans also gained a foothold at St. Raphael, in the Frejus area, and the Hyeres Islands, 10 miles off the mainland from Cape Negre.)

Nazi propagandists declared the Southern France landings were "on the same level as the landings in Sea Canadians Included.

(A Spanish radio report said Canadian troops were included in the invasion forces, but there was no confirmation of this. It also was thought probable, however, that the combined Canadian-United States special service force which helped to hold the enemy beachhead in Italy would be in the forefront of the landing.)

On the first day of operations on this fourth major front against Hitler "substantial numbers" of troops were put ashore, Gen. Maitland Wilson's headquarters announced last night.

Allied airmen sweeping over the battle areas told of the day and night there appeared to be no opposition to the landings except scattered "running all over the countryside."

The Jerries were caught completely by surprise, and that few of the enemy troops who have been scattered or captured," wrote Ralph Parker, Moscow correspondent of the New York Times, in a pooled press dispatch.

2,000 PLANES HIT AIRCRAFT AND OIL PLANTS IN REICH

Troops and Defences On North and South French Battlefields Also Pounded

BERLIN BOMBED

London, Aug. 16—(CP)—Another great armada of 2,000 planes, half of them heavy bombers, smashed today at aircraft and oil plants and airdromes in Germany while other hundreds of fliers attacked enemy troops and defences on the north and south French battlefields.

Targets all were in the Leipzig and Magdeburg areas in the very heart of Germany.

Berlin was bombed last night with two-ton blockbusters with which R.A.F. mosquitos disturbed the nazi capital's sleep.

The German radio said the Reich also was being penetrated by American flights from Italy which were striking over the Alps into Austria and Bavaria.

This was the fourth straight day in which the U.S. 8th air force had sent 1,000 or more heavy bombers against nazi targets in Germany.

The Germans said bomber fleets from the west were over south central Germany, Hannover, Brunswick and other areas. An earlier report asserted 20 bombers were destroyed.

Spitfire squadrons cut air support for the Allied battle of annihilation in Falaise Gap in which a massive force of 1,900 heavy bombers, fighters and fighter-bombers "with strength" mangled 21 German air force bases.

GERMAN 7TH ARMY BREAKING UP

By Hal Boyle
(AP War Correspondent)
U.S. 3rd Army Headquarters, Aug. 16.—11:15 a.m. (AP)—The German 7th Army is breaking up into roving guerilla bands and appears today to have passed the point where it is able to man its remaining men and supplies for a breakthrough, Lt. Gen. George S. Patton, Jr. said.

Patton's statement was issued to join other broken and disorganized units fleeing beyond Falaise.

Action is blazing forth in all France with the latest Allied move the invasion of the French Riviera, indicated by small arrows on the above map. Allied landings have been made on a 100-mile stretch of the south coast of France (4) between Nice and Marseilles. Meanwhile Canadian and American spearheads are gradually closing the gap between Caen and Le Mans to trap the Germans in the Normandy Bulge (1), and cut them off from Paris (2). Fighting in the Falaise area continues down the coast toward Bordeaux and towards Tours. From southwest France (3) Nazi troops are reported being withdrawn, to rush (6) the aid of embattled Nazi forces in the north.

GERMAN 7TH ARMY BREAKING UP

By Hal Boyle
(AP War Correspondent)
U.S. 3rd Army Headquarters, Aug. 16.—11:15 a.m. (AP)—The German 7th Army is breaking up into roving guerilla bands and appears today to have passed the point where it is able to man its remaining men and supplies for a breakthrough, Lt. Gen. George S. Patton, Jr. said.

Patton's statement was issued to join other broken and disorganized units fleeing beyond Falaise.

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the 1st Canadian Army in France, Aug. 16—(CP)—With bombs thrown up by scores of dirt along side the Caen-Falaise highway, I fled in a jeep Monday from an R. A. F. bombing which in error became turned upon Canadian infantry and armor.

My companions and I escaped, more fortunate than an undetermined number of 1st Canadian Army personnel who were killed, wounded and driven berserk by territory where they are prepared for further battles", said the broadcast recorded by the Associated Press.

We were luckier, too, than other correspondents who found themselves in the midst of the mistaken target area and were pinned down in a dugout while the earth heaved and shuddered around them. Ralph Allen, War Correspondent for the Toronto Globe and Mail, was one of these.

In a copyright story of his experiences Allen said the number of killed and wounded was "many."

An explanation advanced by a Senior Canadian staff officer was that the pattern made by the combination of woods and ground features in the Caen-Falaise area virtually duplicated the correct target.

My companions and I had left an observation post and were driving up the Falaise highway toward Caen when we saw fighter-bombers getting closer and closer to us. We didn't realize at first what it was, but when we did Lieut. Dave Campbell of Hamilton, Ont., who was driving, pressed his helmet and stepped on the gas.

Staffed Canadian soldiers peered from slit trenches and dugouts and other covey points as we raced up the road, the bombs falling closer and closer. At one point showers of dirt were thrown onto the roadside.

Finally we forsook the road and jolted over fields to get out of the target line. Once clear, we saw another formation of heavies give the area a going over.

Officers at a headquarters told us there were battle cries to call off the attack but some time elapsed before the bombing ceased.

Officers said the attack did not affect the Canadian assault forward Falaise which began that day and which the R. A. F. bombers were supporting. However, some equipment was damaged and the reaction of troops in the area was one of dismay.

Earlier the R. A. F. had carried out an unprecedented night bombing attack as a prelude to a Canadian offensive south of Caen, and had pin-pointed their targets with unerring precision.

Next Saturday's episode will result in some method of communications being established between ground troops and bombers.

Lt.-Gen. Crerar, commander of the 1st Canadian Army, who was in an aircraft at the time, estimated 80 per cent of the R. A. F. bombs fell on enemy target areas.

RUSSIANS READY FOR ALL-OUT BID FOR WARSAW

Build Up Reserves And Eliminate Foe Threat to Right Flank of Russians

REPULSE HEAVY ATTACK

By DANIEL DE LUCE
(A.P. Staff Writer.)

Moscow, Aug. 16 (AP)—The Red Army appeared to be making its final, all-out bid for Warsaw against bitter resistance in the Praga district just across the Vistula and swift Vistula from the besieged Polish capital.

Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky's army group has been within gunshot of Warsaw since July 29, but for the first time in many days, the Soviet communique mentioned the Warsaw battle, disclosing the destruction of 22 Nazi tanks and 800 troops in a counter-attack in the battle of Praga.

Marshal Rokossovsky has completed his assault plans, built up reserves, strengthened his communications and eliminated a strong German threat to his right flank and today was striking for the heart of the enemy defence zone before Warsaw, Independents were that the struggle on the east side of the Vistula was in its final stage.

Seasoned Russian and Polish troops now are strongly dug in in a semicircle around Praga, a great industrial district, and their massed artillery and tanks are ready for the battleground with derelict tanks and supporting Germans dead.

While only a frontal battle for Warsaw was reported in the Praga area, the Germans were in a precarious position and faced flank blows from the north and south as well.

Red army troops stood unshaken before Warsaw after hurling back German reserve of tanks and infantry thrown into a costly counter-attack.

Estimate 50,000 Germans Are Still in Allied Noose

By GLADWIN HILL
(C.P. War Correspondent.)

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 16 (AP)—Field Marshal Gen. Gyenther Von Kluge has managed to extricate most of his armor from the still tightening Normandy trap, front dispatches said today, and his infantry remnants are steaming through the escape hatch south of Falaise.

Allied ground troops hammering all around the perimeter of the German 7th army's salient have halved the gap in 36 hours and narrowed the escape gap to eight miles or less. Allied planes wrecked hundreds of German vehicles in the Nazis' swift, but generally orderly retreat to the east.

It was not known how many Germans were still in the trap. The latest estimate, and it was many hours old, was 50,000. Other sources put it higher, including more than 20 miles long and no more than eight miles deep.

Explanation Given.

One explanation contained in a front dispatch for the failure of the Allies to close the Falaise-Argentan escape gap was that the two armies driving toward each other met the extreme concentration to avoid coming under each other's artillery fire.

Canadian, 1st army troops on the north side of the pocket reached Falaise and launched an assault on that city and British forces captured Vassy, 30 miles to the west. British and American troops together sliced off a large section of the western end of the pocket. The Americans scored gains of up to three miles and took, Thursday, a road junction nine miles southeast of Vire.

Putanges, a major crossing of the Orne River 10 miles west of Argentan, was captured, widening the southern jaw of the escape gap.

Additional gains were made east of Ger and northeast of Domfront.

British troops by-passed the former German rallying point of Conde-Sur-Noireau and pushed across the Noireau River.

"Cease to Exist as Army"

The whole western end of the "Von Kluge's Salient" was buckling. Von Kluge's beaten troops gave ground along both the north and south sides of the pocket.

At the shell-swept escape gap, itself, where resistance still was the fiercest, Canadians had driven southward through the defence crust to within less than a mile north of Falaise. The situation in the Canadian sector now was described as fluid.

While enemy troops that got through the Argentan-Falaise gap escaped the prospect of capture they still faced the prospect of destruction by Allied air attacks which would write them off just as effectively was a fighting force. It also pointed out that many of the enemy divisions now hemmed in took a week to get from the Seine River to the battle area and the way back out would be under far greater difficulty.

As the Allies continued to hammer the Germans in the Normandy death trap an American officer at the front declared Von Kluge's force "has ceased to exist as an army."

Materiel Taken.

American troops captured huge quantities of equipment as they pressed forward. Hundreds of prisoners streamed back to the cages, with thousands more certain to be taken within the next few days, a front dispatch said.

North of Argentan the Germans still were reported battling desperately against the armored drive of the American 3rd Army commanded by Lt.-Gen. George S. Patton, Jr., and to the north of the American hands and forward elements strove to close the escape gap and join with the Canadians driving south in the Falaise area.

Daniel Spry 31, Becomes Canada's Youngest General

Defence Headquarters announced his promotion from Brigadier to acting Major-General and his succeeds Maj.-Gen. George Kitchin, 33, as divisional commander at Montreal, is the most youthful of Canada's high-ranking officers.

No indication as to whether he is taking a division was given in the official release. Such matters now are subject to tight censorship. However, it has been announced recently that Maj.-Gen. R. P. L. Keller, Kelowna, B.C., commander of the 2nd Division, attached to the 1st. Canadian Army in Normandy, has been wounded and might be that Gen Spry is succeeding Gen. Keller.

Chungking, Aug. 16 —(AP)— American heavy bombers bombed Japanese Air Force bases on Mako in the Pescadores Islands today in the first blow at the enemy island stronghold between Formosa and China.

The Formosa harbor of Takao in the Pescadores group also was hit. Japanese island was bombed at Mako Air Base by 20 Liberators from U. S. 14th Air Force.

President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill in the Cairo pronouncement said the Pescadores would be returned to China, from which Japanese seized them, after the Japanese are defeated.

Typhoons Make Stukas Look Like Baby's Pram Says Kingston Pilot

By ALAN RANDAL
(Canadian Staff Writer.)

London, Aug. 16 (CP)—Remember back in 1940 when our troops were streaming out of France at Dunkirk and the German Stuka dive bombers were the terror of retreating British army? Well, today our Typhoons make those Stukas look like a baby's pram.

That is the word of Group Capt. Paul Davoud, D.S.O., D.F.C., of Kingston, Ont., commanding a Canadian Typhoon fighter-bomber wing in Normandy and he says they haven't really got down to business yet. They haven't had a chance. The weather hasn't been too good and the targets haven't been sufficiently on the move.

But "once it starts it should be a three-ringed circus," he said.

He was referring to the part the Typhoons and their rocket-firing rockets will play when the battle of Normandy reaches a point where the German armor becomes dislodged and attempts more flight operations in the face of vastly operations.

To illustrate his point he spoke of a Typhoon attack on 18 German tanks in a valley near the Sienne. Bombers had knocked out a bridge across the Sienne over which the tanks were to go. With its destruction they deployed about the valley, each of them becoming an individual target. Bombers would not be so good for the job so they sent the rocket-firing Typhoons and they knocked out 17 of the tanks.

Commandos Scramble Up Almost Unscalable Cliffs To Silence Guns

By GEORGE TUCKER
(AP War Correspondent, distributed by Associated Press)

Aboard Admiral Lyal Davidson's flagship, Aug. 16 — Commandos (AP)—The navy got 'em here but it was the commandos who unlocked the doors.

Under protection of booming naval guns, Canadian, British and American and French troops tourde-force assaults on beaches of Southern France along 40 miles of front today, and only after desperate fighting by troops who had slipped ashore six hours before, scaled almost unscalable cliffs and overwhelmed machine crews of formidable coastal batteries that had been holding up the initial approach the jumping-off point with ammunition dumps.

The plan was so imaginative in conception and daring in execution that it originally ruled out by the navy as being impossible, but the men insisted it could be done and the tough Ranger-commando type boys did it, paving the way for the landings of Levant and Port Cros just off the mainland and silencing the big guns before daybreak.

While this heavy cruiser and flotillas of other cruisers, battleships and destroyers of the Allied navies, including one big U.S. battleship veteran, manoeuvred four giant convoys into position, the troops climbed into small boats and were escorted into a mass of rocky inlets by a flotilla of landing craft. Gilbert Reid of Kalamazoo, Mich., said: "We're anybody's ashore who wants to go ashore," the big blond Ranger from Michigan said. "I'm the first to the beach at 12:30 a.m. and marking the landing area with signal lights. By 1:30 succeeding waves were clambering up the cliffs and from that moment on it was a matter of waiting until they signalled the guns were silenced.

Like dark blurs on an inky sea we could see the outlines of ship after ship as they patrolled lanes. Suddenly there was a flash from a transport beam and twin tongues of flame leaped across the water. It was a destroyer.

A message from the destroyer said she had been chasing a ship which turned out to identify herself. The destroyer brought her guns up to bear on the stranger and ordered a direct hit with the first salvo. The enemy tanker leaped into flame and became a torch which quickly lit up the summer sky for miles around.

The same destroyer soon brought her guns to bear on the mainland beach target and after a brief interval laconically signalled: "Target destroyed. Am now proceeding alpha."

From time to time flares or star shells burst in the air and the enemy craft came near us and no doubt the mainland shore batteries fell in our vicinity. In fact it was too easy, we simply couldn't be hit.

As day broke the first skeins of bombers roared overhead, and dumped their loads on the beaches. The first assault troops reached the beaches at exactly 8 a.m. for the first landings and after the next hour and 45 minutes nothing but reports of continued success came in.

Belleville Police Two Men For Port Hope

Belleville police are holding two suspected men, whom they allege escaped from Port Hope police early today. They gave their names as Rosaire Diobois and Lionel Bernard, both of Montreal, and were apprehended by Constables Caldwell and Doherty of the city force following reports from Port Hope that four men had escaped here before the police arrived. The third member of the Montreal quartette is apprehended outside of Port Hope, Provincial Police revealed later in the day, while a fourth warden operated throughout Central Ontario today seeking the fourth member of the gang.

Port Hope police successfully stopped the car in which the men were being driven in a suspicious manner through that town early today. Before police could overtake the occupants they jumped and ran away. Port Hope police seized the vehicles, which they believe to be stolen, and held the men.

The two men apprehended in the Belleville C.N.R. yards by local police evoked the Port Hope authorities and apparently boarded an eastbound Canadian National freight train as far as Belleville, where they ran into the vehicles of police. In the meantime Port Hope police had broadcast descriptions of the four men, which Chief Probert feels correspond to Diobois and Besnard, who are being held here.

Sgt. Joe Hunter Keeps Periodical Trysts With Enemy

It is a far cry from the playing fields of St. Michael's Academy and Belleville Collegiate Institute, to the bullet-ridden skies of Normandy, but Sergeant Navigator Joe Hunter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hunter, 302 Foster Avenue, is keeping periodical trysts with the enemy despite the fact that only a short time ago he was kicking a football around the local campus.

The other day, Joe's bombers swooped low over an ammunition dump in Villiers in France. A moment later came the message — that the bomber zoomed high on its return journey. Later the official report stated "Target completely obliterated." Joe's first navigation had brought his ship directly over the target with excellent results.

He is well-known in the city being born here 21 years ago. He received his education at St. Michael's Academy and attended Belleville Collegiate Institute where he played on the football squad.

Enlisting two years ago in the R.C.A.F. he received his various stations in Canada, obtaining his navigator's wings at Chatham, N.B. He went overseas last November and was posted to a bomber squadron and at present is busy plotting courses that ultimately lead to the destruction of enemy communications and equipment. A sister, Miss Joan Hunter, is the second part of the "Joe and Joan" family of Mr. and Mrs. Hunter.

Thousands Enjoy Colorful First-Night Program as Kiwanis 3-Day Karnival Gets Under Way

"War-Workers" on Parade, Stage Show and Games Feature Opening Night

PRIZES DRAWN

Upwards of four thousand people surged through the downtown sections of the city last night as "K Night" inaugurated the three-day Karnival, sponsored by the Belleville Kiwanis Club, held jointly on the armouries lawn and that section of East Bridge Street between Front and Pinnacle Streets.

Highlighting the three-night affair will be a contest to decide Belleville's Miss War Worker, to which thirteen attractive young ladies representing four war industries of the city are entered; a draw for a $1,000 Victory Bond, a hope chest and other major prizes; nightly entertainment on a raised dais located on the armouries lawn, and a potpourri of games, that feature the Bridge Street setting.

Last night the activities formed a fitting prelude to the major attractions to be staged tonight and Thursday night.

Thousands Jam Games.

Despite little evening surcease from the terrific heat of the hottest day of the year, thousands of people jammed that section of Pinnacle Street from the armouries gate to the curtain finally rang up on the opening performance of "Jitterbug Jubilee."

Undefatigable clubmen perspired freely as they battled against time in order to get the show on the road schedule. Scarcely had the club chairman given the signal, than master of ceremonies Ted Schwab sent the Karnival off to a flying start with a rousing cheer for the artists created on the armouries dawn.

Preceding the "Jubilee" proper a first hand view of the pretty entrants in the War Worker Contest, which will be judged tonight with Toronto's own "Miss War Worker" as one of the judges, was afforded.

Introduced to Crowd.

Introduced individually by Kiwanian Schwab, the girls, attractively gowned in replicas of the war worker uniforms, stepped forward and received a thunderous handclap cheered. A grotesque clown, was included in the parade and added a touch of comedy with the aid of Danny Smith, local guitarist and entertainer, and the huge crowd in good humor with his skilful playing of his instrument, and his exciting a song or two by way of diversion.

Following the parade of the War Workers, two of the dancers, Miss Dorothy Brown, and Shirley Tapp, were presented with two major prizes respectively for selling the most tickets on the Hope Chest prize.

Under the spotlight from high atop a specially constructed tower performers entertained the large crowd in a variety of acts that augured well for this particular part of the Karnival.

Splendid Program.

Sweet-voiced Arthur Duby, boy soprano, in his usual performed over Radio Station CKWS, sent the program away to a musical start with his fine renditions of popular war numbers. The youngster possesses a good voice and was heard to splendid advantage over a public address system loaned for the occasion by the Royal Canadian Air Force. He was accorded a hearty hand at the end of his song-group as was Mrs. William Grant his piano accompanist.

Next came a clever black and tan act staged by Gordon Lee of Sherbrooke, Quebec, and now at the Tremlett Air Station. Winner of the Canadian Slack Wire Championship, the young airman demonstrated his ability on a difficult feats on the wire. In one act he was assisted by the pretty ballerina Gisele Bell. He concluded his act with a number of clever balancing acts performed on a series of chairs.

Touch of Comedy.

A touch of comedy was injected into the program by LAC. Lobb, also of Tremlett Air Station, a clever monologist, and musician, he varied his program with humorous stories and his with the disappointments of a mythical married life in song. He accompanied himself on his guitar.

Hearty Applause.

Both airmen who received well-deserved applause for the quality of their individual acts, were present to receive the kind permission of the commanding officer of the Trenton Air Station, Group Captain Bell-Irving. They will perform at subsequent shows to be staged tonight and Thursday.

Brilliantly lighted for the occasion, the "Street of Chance" was a mecca for the crowd, comprising residents following the stage performance.

Kiwanians under President Jack McVeigh and his hard-working chairmen, have left no stone unturned to give the public the utmost in their money. Novelty games, some old, a lot new, drew the large crowd into the perverted maelstrom, and it stayed despite the tempting entertainment of the city's parks, to assuage its thirst for this sort of entertainment.

Friendly Strikes.

Despite the brilliancy of hundreds of colored lights, shirt-sleeved clubmen, the most of whom would change to professional dress barker with their tonsorial advertising, distributed pamphlets from the figurative housetops, the attractiveness of their own particular wares.

The same friendly rivalry—there always is, in club affairs of this nature, but all good-spirited and the whole was productive of a distinct quickening of the pulses of the club. The Kiwanians liked it, the crowd enjoyed it, and out of all came a splendid program that should find favors insofar as the various booth attractions were concerned.

Bingo Attractive Game.

The ubiquitous Bingo, one of the most popular games of the nation was there. In all, the "Street of Chance" had 15 booths available to be seen here in some time, and patients will be given the opportunity of not only winning handsome prizes but contributing to a worthy cause.

Rivals on the softball Diamonds this week, Kiwanis and Rotarian Club members evidenced the fine spirit of sportsmanship existing among service clubs of this city. The younger men threw their efforts into the task and assisted their brother clubmen of the Kiwanis Club in many of the booths.

Biggest First Night

Kiwanis Club officials today were smiles of satisfaction. One of the biggest "first nights" in years attended their weeks of preparation, and they feel it is a happy augury for the success of the whole. They have the satisfaction of knowing that their efforts were a splendid cause and that the general public is appreciative of their efforts and of the community work as evidenced in the thousands that thronged the heat to witness the opening of the 1944 Karnival.

Tonight is the last night. Tonight is another night. One that thousands of people have been looking forward to with eagerness.

"Thirteen attractive young ladies will parade before the keen eyes of appraising judges on the armouries lawn tonight at 8 p.m. and a huge crowd will likely view the judging.

Another attraction that will also be offered on the armouries lawn tonight is the acts, and "Name the Chance" will burst forth into its brilliancy of lighted bloom with games for the whole family.

BANCROFT

LAUNCH BURNED AT BAPTISTE STN.

Ronald Maxwell, Owner, and Guest, Captain Craig, Escape Injury

Bancroft, Aug. 15—Fire completely destroyed a pleasure launch belonging to Ronald Maxwell, Bancroft, early Saturday evening. Mr. Maxwell had been at his summer cottage on Lake Baptiste and in company with a guest of his, Captain Craig, pulling into the main dock at Baptiste Station Saturday evening when both doors over the engine compartment suddenly blew open and evidently the gas fumes and the excessive heat caused the vapor to explode. The two men although not injured got a singeing. Mr. Maxwell in spite of the fire hazard managed to propel the stricken yacht to the dock a distance of some twenty feet and after leaping onto the dock shoved the burning craft away from other boats. The launch alone was partially covered by insurance.

Miss Aileen Palmateer returned home from Belleville recently where she spent a few weeks' visit with the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Mills. On her return to Bancroft she was accompanied by Miss Margaret White who is now visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Palmateer of town.

Hon. Chas. Cahan, Former Secretary Of State, Dies

Montreal, Aug. 16 (CP) — Hon. Charles H. Cahan, who was Canada's Secretary of State for 10 years in the Conservative government of R. B. Bennett, in Nine Provinces until 1940 general election when he defeated by Brooke Claxton, parliamentary assistant to Prime Minister King.

Mr. Cahan practised law in Halifax, later moving to Trinidad, Britain and Montreal.

He returned to Canada where he practised law and again turned to his political career.

SOME LEGAL ARGUMENT

Albuquerque, N.M., Aug. 16 (AP) — When L. L. Mauldin returned from a west coast war job, he reported his house had been stolen. Not at all, said the District Attorney. The house couldn't be stolen because New Mexico has no such statute regarding houses. Hence common law would prevail, Mr. Mauldin would be considered real estate, and since real estate is not considered personal property, house-lugging-away can't be considered theft.

THE COURAGE OF THE VERY YOUNG

In this radiophoto, received in New York, a British Tommy reaches from a doorway to "retrieve" an Italian youngster who attempted to venture out on a Florence street infested by Nazi snipers. Indiscriminate sniping within Florence is making difficult the task of carrying food, water and medicine across the Arno to the hard-pressed Florentines.

CANADIANS STORM INTO OUTSKIRTS OF FALAISE

Dominate Narrow Gap Through Which Von Kluge is Trying to Get Out

OPPOSITION NOT KNOWN

By ROSS MUNRO
(C.P. War Correspondent)

With the 1st. Canadian Army on the Falaise Front, Aug. 16 (C.P. Cable) — Ontario infantry stormed into the outskirts of Falaise today and are probing into this vital road junction dominating the northern tip of the narrow gap through which Von Kluge is seeking to pull his battered German 7th. Army out of the Normandy gap.

These troops drove down the highway from the north, swung around to west of the city during the night, then went down slopes on the edge of the city this morning and worked their way among the buildings of Falaise.

It is not known yet what opposition they are meeting, but the sound of fire from machine-guns and heavier guns can be heard from the area of the important communications centre.

Pockets of Germans are hidden in the woods north of the town, and in them itself the enemy is believed to have a number of dug-in tanks, rocket mortars and anti-tank guns.

Fall Inevitable

The fall of Falaise, however, is inevitable because it is dominated by Ontario troops on the hills to the west and southwest and by other Canadian forces which made Monday's attack across the Laison River east of the main highway.

The highway leading northeast of Falaise towards St. Pierre-Sur-Dives is now useless to the Germans and other routes running out of the town are within easy range of the big concentration of Canadian guns.

The battleground today was unusually quiet. There was a lot of traffic movement, but there has been no heavy shelling by the Germans and nothing in the way of enemy mortar fire compared with the barrages loosed on Canadian positions when the front line was just south of Caen.

Great Change in Picture

The two attacks made by 1st. Canadian Army forces south of Caen in the past eight days have made a greater change in the battle picture than any operations since the landing.

The Germans appear shaken to the core and unless the enemy is able to bring in S.S. troops in large numbers it would look as though the Canadians will be able to keep a steady advance going with little trouble.

Neither Ontario troops who overtook Falaise from 500-ft. slopes nor other Canadian infantry marching down from the northwest met any serious opposition and casualties during the past 24 hours probably have been lighter than at any time since D-Day.

Surrender in Scores

Germans have surrendered in scores and personnel in charge of prisoner-of-war enclosures have been hard-pressed to keep up with the flow. A large number of prisoners were dispirited.

For the first time since they started fighting in France the Canadians making the attack on Falaise are seeing villages in the battle area that hardly have a scratch. Until now all the villages have been heavily bombed and shelled and their occupation has meant little more than the occupation of piles of rubble.

C'ming in on Falaise, target of their bitterly contested 20-mile advance from Caen, Canadian troops captured or over-ran a number of towns and villages.

King George Sends Congratulations To The President

London, Aug. 16 (CP)—In a message of congratulations on the liberation of Guam, King George told President Roosevelt last night that the British Commonwealth "will make an increasingly powerful contribution" to "the utter defeat of Japan."

The text:

"Please accept, Mr. President, my warm congratulations on the liberation of Guam from a brutal enemy's occupation.

"This successful feat of arms marks yet another notable stage in the brilliant advance of U.S. forces in the Central Pacific and has aroused our deep admiration.

"It is a splendid augury of the coming utter defeat of Japan, to which the forces of the British Commonwealth of Nations also will make an increasingly powerful contribution."

TIDE OF REVOLT AGAINST GERMANS STEADILY RISING

MAQUIS ATTACK

London, Aug. 16 (CP) — Underground forces, inspired by the Allied landings along the Riviera and the growing German rout in Normandy, were reported rising everywhere throughout France today in a swelling tide of revolt against Nazi forces which have held the French people in bondage for more than four years.

Dispatches from Spain quoted advices from the French border as saying the Maquis, acting under pre-arranged plans, had launched a series of attacks upon German garrisons in Southern France as soon as they received news of the Allied landings.

By sundown Tuesday night they were said to have surrounded a score of towns, including Auch, Agen, Matauban, Rodez, Perigueux, Tulle, Aurillac and Limoges.

Serious German resistance was expected at Limoges, these advices said, but the other towns mentioned were reported managed by partisans of not less than 1,000 men each.

The German commanders at Pau, near the Spanish frontier, and at Toulouse, capital of the whole south-central area, were sent ultimatums demanding their immediate surrender.

Vichy in Turmoil

Vichy, meanwhile, was reported in a turmoil, with collaborationists attempting to flee the city and armed guards patrolling the streets. The AFI (Independent French agency) quoted a dispatch from Bern as saying 10,000 French officials were "advancing toward Vichy" and that they were being hired en route by hundreds of recruits.

The same dispatch asserted that other patriot forces of the Interior were moving on Bordeaux.

In Paris, the populace was said to have gone wild with joy at the news of the Allied landings along the Riviera, and some reports from the French border said sporadic fighting had broken out in the streets between anti-fascists and patriots assembled in the streets singing the "Marseillaise." German police were reported unable to control spontaneous patriot demonstrations.

A Madrid dispatch to The Daily Mail said the Germans had ordered bonfires of army archives and files of Vichy officials to keep them from Allied hands.

French Forces Of Interior Seize Dozen Towns

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 16—(AP)— French forces of the interior have captured approximately a dozen towns, most of them in Brittany and have encircled 1,500 Germans near Palmpol, a special communique from headquarters said today.

Headquarters said the French patriots had operated "in close cooperation with other Allied forces." They have entered Slune, Brasparts, Pleyben, Chateauneuf, Coray and Milizac and captured by storm Guimperle, Bannalec, Chateaulin and Douarnenez.

The communique also said the F. F. I. had annihilated German garrisons at Meriken and Bourg St. Maurice after fierce fighting.

French patriot resistance was reported quickening through Central and Southern France. In the north, the Maquis were reported to have burned 400,000 gallons of German gasoline.

The Nazi garrison at Tarantaise was reported driven back toward the Italian border with an increasing loss of personnel through interference to pursuing Italian as well as French, patriots.

Cardinal Thanks 'Noble, Valorous People of Canada'

By BILL BOSS
(C. P. War Correspondent)

Florence, Aug. 16 (C.P. Cable) — A message to the "noble and valorous people of Canada" and expressing thanks to them for sending their sons to liberate Italy has been issued by His Cardinal Della Costa, Archbishop of Florence.

"Canada is a country of special interest for me," the cardinal said today in an interview. He said he hoped Canada and the Allies would help Italy to re-establish herself both materially and in the old place in their friendship.

His interview was granted in a study less than a mile away from German machine-gun positions. Armed Partisans guarded the entrance to the Cardinal's palace and elsewhere other patriots were making a final check to ensure that the area was entirely free from snipers.

"The Cardinal said he was a friend of Cardinal Villeneuve of Quebec. Both were nominated to the College of Cardinals at the same time and received their red hats from Pope Pius XI in the same ceremony at St. Peter's.

French Forces Returning to Own Soil Greatest Occasion for Civilians

By WILLIAM STEWART
(C. P. War Correspondent)

With Allied Forces in France, Aug. 16 (C.P. Cable) — Appearance of French forces returning to battle on their own soil was for civilians in Normandy and Brittany the greatest occasion since the Allied landings.

Travelling through the American sector recently, I saw the first French armored columns rolling through dust clouds in the Cherbourg peninsula—an unforgettable scene.

The Americans had heard rumors about French troops joining them and civilians asked repeatedly why forces of their own were not called in.

French youngsters who were among the Maquis, child middle-aged Frenchmen and even older men who hated the Germans, asked when they too would be mobilized. The appearance of French armored columns here satisfied some of their anxiety about the hour when Frenchmen would be given the opportunity of wearing uniforms in France again and taking up arms against the Boche.

The French columns could easily have been mistaken for fresh American forces arriving in France. Their equipment, except for a few civilian automobiles in army paint, was entirely American. But there was a French tricolor flying from every German tank and armored vehicle and like every truck, they also bore the Cross of Lorraine, emblem of the Fighting French.

The French soldiers called out greetings to villagers who stared back at their American helmets and uniforms as they overpassing the troops as their own.

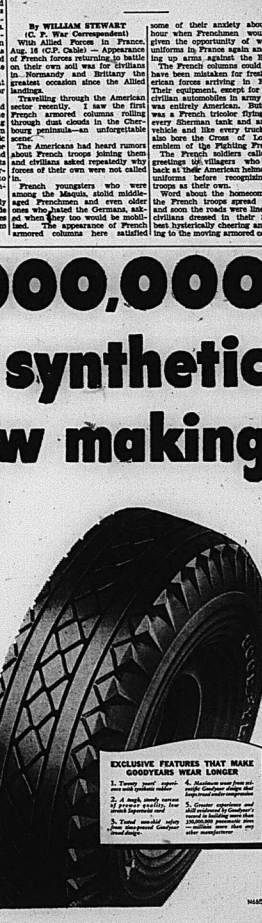
Worst about the homecoming of the French troops spread quickly and soon the roads were lined with civilians dressed in their Sunday best hysterically cheering and waving to the moving armored columns.

More than 4,000,000 GOODYEAR all-synthetic rubber tires are now making history on the road!

YES, in spite of many wartime difficulties; Goodyear has already built more than 4,000,000 all-synthetic rubber tires of all types—nearly half of them in the popular 6.00-16 passenger car size;

This is a record achievement, made possible by the Goodyear Research Laboratory's twenty years' work in developing synthetic rubber. It proves that synthetic rubber tire production is out of the woods and rolling into high.

More than that; it provides a real measure of the worth of tires manufactured from man-made rubber, as shown by such typical records as these:



A large metropolitan taxi company using 3,000 Goodyear synthetic rubber tires reports an average service of 30,000 miles per tire—before recapping;

And scores of letters from war workers, police officials, doctors and other unrestricted drivers tell of equally high mileage with trouble-free performance. Similar satisfactory service is being enjoyed by users of Goodyear synthetic rubber tubes.

All this demonstrates that it is not the material but what is done with it that counts most in building tires. It is one more proof of the tire-building skill that makes more people ride on Goodyear tires than on any other kind.

Surely; if you judge by performance; your choice in synthetic rubber tires must be Goodyears—now, as for the past twenty-nine consecutive years, the world's first-choice tire;

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES THAT MAKE GOODYEARS WEAR LONGER

1. Tough, supple cord—one with Goodyear rubber.
2. A tough anti-friction breaker which prevents scuffing and shield-like tread.
3. Extra strength nylon cord Supercord Gumdipped in Goodyear rubber.
4. Maximum over-load strength Gumdipped cord body.
5. Greater squeegee and skid resistance by Goodyear research in building more than 50,000,000 tires—more than any other manufacturer.

Liberation

For France liberation has begun in earnest. Southern France has now been the scene of the second Allied invasion in France as a result of Tuesday morning's offensive. A French army making up more than half of the Allied landing forces, is now at work in the homeland battling Hitlerdom. General de Gaulle had called France to arms and announced that the day of liberation has arrived. It was a day the like of the time spoken of in the Marsaillaise "the day of glory has arrived." The fourth great front is opened. French troops are also in Northwest France with British, Canadians and Americans, achieving brilliant victories and causing heavy Hun losses and the loss of their country.

The Allies have learned what they required to know through previous invasions in Sicily, in Italy at Salerno and at Anzio and in the Channel. They have the vast equipment and gun power and seapower so essential to amphibious warfare.

The invasion of Southern France has started out with the taking of a wide coastal front, and the first phase of it is saying there was likelihood of an invasion their situation is so desperate that there was no air opposition and little land opposition. So far has the enemy slipped from his former strength in blitzkriegs.

It was a great day for France and a day of terror for collaborateurs. It was the day when the underground of the south of France rose. The day of liberation had come.

The Allied invasion was according to the great pattern used in the other invasions, particularly that used in Normandy. Airborne infantry were poured in after there had been incessant bombing for some days. More than 800 battleships and other warships and unrivalled airpower took part. The Allied air power had sealed off the area of the invasion, a great undertaking.

Great Facts Stand Out

France is in the field against the foe and also fights from the underground, Germany is extremely weak in the air. The smashing of the German armies by the Russians, the mighty Allied air raids over Germany's factories and military machine and communications and the result of the Normandy invasion have brought Germany into such sore straits that she is no longer able to mass a defence of the west line, she is no longer able to threaten Allied air supremacy.

The outcome of the latest invasion is filled with great promise as the war in France moves into a critical stage for the German armies of occupation. It is another long step on the road to Berlin. It will bring Paris into the Allied fold, it will bring Italy along, and it could mean the end of the English Channel is the narrowest. The destruction of the German forces in France is on the program of this year 1944, so rich with fruitage for the Allies as the year nears the beginning of the sixth year of the struggle. In this war all the power of the Allies has been used with consummate skill against the enemy and the end is realized that the war is sweeping to its climax.

Allied timing is again shown at its best.

2-Edged Sword Against Germany

A double-edged blow was struck at Nazi Germany recently when the ghetto of Lodz under the Jewish general on the East Prussian and Polish fronts. The offensive was a part of the great plan of strategy of the Red armies and was carried out by a leader who comes of a race which Hitlerite Germany has murdered and cruelly treated during this war by making the Jewish folk the object of the most savage and brutal persecutions.

A Russian victory is serious for the Germans and will have a part in the demolition of Hitler's evil rule. The leadership of a Jew in command of one of the great Russian armies can be calculated to hurt the Huns greatly.

Retribution has come to roost for the enemy as the scion of a race that Germany has persecuted is one of the commanders who will bear down on Germany until she is crushed in the greatest of all wars. Marshal Stalin is using a psychological weapon against the Germans which will serve the great purpose of a blow at Nazi narrowness and glorification of the Hun as the superman. A man who is a Russian and a Jew has defeated Hitler's forces.

Like ghosts Hitlerite Germany's crimes based on bigotry and exaltation of Germany as the home of a race of "supermen" have come back to torture the pride of the Hun. The Jewish commander of the Red army must seem like a Judas Maccabeus of this century as he strikes the persecutors of his race and faith. He is a living force that can exercise his power against the Hun who is falling through the rottenness of the foundation of Nazism and German militarism.

One More Nazi Crime

(Poland Fights)

From an eye-witness come the details of one of the many crimes committed by the Germans in Poland: 63 persons, including men, women and children, were brought to a forest near Lomza and brutally murdered. First, the faces of the men were splashed with some caustic liquid which blinded them, apparently to prevent any attempt at defence on their part. Then the women and children were murdered. The children were thrown into specially dug holes and blasted by grenades. Women, among them mothers of the murdered children, met a death last. Many of them still lived when they were buried. The Germans drove their cars back and forth over the rocking earth of the graves to finally quiet their victims.

Walk on Bubbles!

(London News Chronicle)

The housewife who works in the kitchen of the new pre-fabricated "unit" houses at Burnt Oak will never have tired feet.

Concrete, blown full of air bubbles, makes the flooring, and when walked on is like treading on turf.

This aerated concrete has a sponge-like texture with very smooth surface, is sound, fire and heat proof, and only one-third the weight of ordinary concrete.

Inscrutable Destiny

(Hamilton Spectator)

Fate appears to play its part in human lives. The wounded soldiers en route to the United States had escaped death in Normandy only to meet it in the twinkling of an eye when their plane crashed in Prestwick in Scotland. An infant in New York fell from a window of a sixth-storey apartment only to be caught three feet from the ground and was then rescued by a janitor in a basement areaway, and suffered nothing worse than minor injuries. Some are marked for death, and some to elude it, and the wherefore remains inscrutable.

Stalin's One Ambition

(Detroit Free Press)

Back from Russia, Eric Johnston states that our Soviet Allies will collaborate with us in peace and trade. They won't be serious competitors in world markets for a long time. They will need great quantities of machinery and reconstruction supplies. They must have time in which to pay. Soviet credit is as good as any in the world.

This is what all American business men in contact with Moscow realize. Stalin, fundamentally realistic, is fanatical in only one ambition: to rebuild "Holy Mother Russia" as a world-powerful state. If we are equally realistic, we shall cooperate. Our territory and institutions have nothing to fear from his program.

Too Tired

(Montreal Herald)

For weeks German armies in the east have been rapidly retreating backwards. That's tiring. When they stop, the Russians pound them. That's wearing. And now when they are almost too tuckered out to raise a hand, the panzer reinstitutes that stiff-armed Nazi salute.

So we can believe the German radio when it says that pledges of loyalty to Hitler have been slow in coming through from the eastern front because of the "extreme fatigue."

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

(Copyright, 1944, Edgar A. Guest)

FATHERS

They walk among us day by day,
And not a sign that we can see
To show the boy who went away
Is missing now in Normandy.

These are the fathers! Up and down
They pass among us, as of old,
And hide their grief from all the town
And keep their sorrowing untold.

So very brave they try to be!
So silent when the group is gay!
They'd have us think that Normandy
Lies still three thousand miles away.

Then someone lets the question slip:
"What of the lad across the sea?"
The answer from a trembling lip:
"Missing, we've heard, in Normandy!"

Pyle in Normandy:
Fighting About Each Hedgerow Is Little Separate War

(By Ernie Pyle)

On the Western Front—(By Wire-less)—What we give you yesterday in trying to describe hedgerow fighting was the general pattern.

If you were to come over here and pick out some hedge-enclosed field at random, the fighting there probably wouldn't be following the general pattern at all. For there is a little separate war, fought under different circumstances.

For instance, you'll come to a woods instead of an open field. The Germans will be dug in all over the woods, in little groups, and it's really tough to get them out. Often in cases like that we will just go around the woods and keep going and let later units take them—those surrounded and doomed fellows.

Or we'll go through the woods and clean it out, and another company, coming through a couple of hours later, will find it full of Germans again. In a war like this one everything is in such confusion I don't see how either side ever gets anywhere.

Sometimes you don't know where your own troops are. As somebody said the other day, no battalion commander can give you the exact location of his various units five minutes after they've jumped off.

We will by-pass whole pockets of Germans, and they will be "there" mopping our following waves when our attacking companies are a couple of miles on the beyond. Gradually the front gets all mixed up. There will be Germans behind you and at the side. They'll be shooting at you from behind and from your flanks.

Sometimes a unit will get so far ahead of those on either side of it that it has to swing around and fight to its rear. Sometimes we fire on our own troops, thinking we are in German hands. We don't see anything, and you can't even tell from the sounds, for each side uses some of the other's captured weapons.

The tanks and the infantry had to work in the closest co-operation in breaking through the German line that runs right in the front of the beachhead area. Neither could have done it alone.

The tanks took care of two minds about having tanks around them. If you're a foot soldier you hate to be near a tank, for it always draws fire. On the other hand, if the going gets tough you pray for a tank to come up and start blasting with its guns.

In close combat each infantryman usually had tanks attached to it. It was the tanks and the infantry that broke through the line and punched a hole for the armored divisions to go through.

The armored divisions practically race around, racking up distances and playing hob, once they got behind the German lines, but it was the infantry and the tanks and tank destroyers that opened the gate for them.

Tanks shuttled back and forth, from one field to another, through out our breakthrough battle, receiving orders right from the infantry. We punched holes through the hedgerows for them, and then the tanks would nose up to them and take the bad spots of the opposition.

It has been a wonderful week since I wrote about every farmhouse and little village in Normandy. The Germans used them for strong points, or put artillery observers in them, and they had to be blasted out.

Most of the French farmers evacuate ahead of the fighting and flit to the rear. They are usually thankful to see them come back to their homes and their towns. Yet it's wonderful to see the grand way they take it.

In a long drive an infantry company may go for days on end, days without letting up. Ammunition is carried in by jeep, by tank and occasionally by jeep. The soldiers sometimes eat only one hot meal a day. They may run clear out of water. Their strength is gradually whittled away by sleep-lessness and exhaustion cases and straggling.

The men get so dirty they forget to wash after they are and dig in. Sometimes they don't wash for days on end, through, or around them, and go on with the fighting. The relieved company may not get to wash for days as a day or two. But in a big push such as the one that broke out of the beachhead, a few hours is about all they ever get.

The company I was with got its orders to rest about five days after it had broken through the hedgerows, or commandeered German cots from the flag stations, of how tired you may be, you always have to dig foxholes.

Then they sent some men with horses looking for water, and more K rations up by jeep, and sat on the ground eating them.

They began to get a shower after last night, but they weren't counting that in our estimate. About 9 o'clock per a lieutenant came out of a foxhole and told the sergeants to pass the word to be ready to move in ten minutes. They bundled up their bedrolls and started just before dark.

Within half an hour they had run into a new fight that lasted all night. They had had but about four hours' rest in three solid days of fighting, and that's the way life is in the infantry.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

PLEASE PASS (UP) THE SUGAR

According to an estimate based on federal government statistics on the per capita consumption of sugar in the United States was 9 pounds per month in 1939, 7 1-2 pounds a month in 1943, 6 1-2 pounds so month in 1944.

Come, come, now folks, you need not worry over your sugar ration. Just because I prefer a saccharin blood is a big spoonful of sugar added to sweeten my coffee.

The human delicate carbohydrate is my chief dietary sin—refined carbohydrates, things made of refined white flour and refined white sugar. Nearly all of the overeating Americans are rich and grow fat, acute and succulent, old and young, thin and fat do is by the use of the refined carbohydrates.

Not that the 90 or 100 calories cancelled by the use of saccharin in place or sugar for sweetening coffee matters in my personal life happiness, but by alternating periods of observation with a non-caloric substitute for sugar I have concluded that the use of saccharin improves my nutrition.

It is not that refined white sugar or refined white flour and the many things good to eat made from these is in itself harmful, but that it is harmful to even come back to them after having eliminated them from my diet. Yet it's wonderful to see the grand way they take it.

There are certain carbohydrates in which people should worry every one concerned with the maintenance of physical fitness and every one concerned about his own personal health and appearance.

As Dr. Ray M. Moore of San Francisco writes in Hygeia for July 8, '44) white sugar "dilutes with calories"—it adds nothing, of course, just as so much potato or cornstarch. Sugar is refined and more quickly, though, but the 400 to 500 calories per day that the average American gets from sugar (8% per capita consumption)—from one-tenth to one-fifth of the total daily caloric requirement—disappears completely sugar-coated from the dietary, while at the same time it increases the requirement for nutrients in the form of thiamin (Vitamin B, (thiamin), B2, (G, riboflavin) and minerals—in short, almost all components of the B complex and minerals which are contained in the body. All carbohydrate in it converted to carbon dioxide and water, and there is a constant level of destruce or glucose in the blood stream, which is the fuel for all muscular activity, including the heart.

Refined white sugar (and refined white flour) does not appeal to the vitamins. Yet it increases the requirement for them—for it does not supply the vitamins which are necessary for its metabolism, metabolism of sugar in the body (as sugar, cane, sugar beet, plain wheat) does, then the load cannot be utilized unless the necessary vitamins are taken in other forms.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Nervous Exhaustion.

Since the series of articles in this column about the poor girl who had all her teeth extracted and then found that she had nerves, started, and came away with the typical "nervous breakdown" and "nervous exhaustion", a lot of readers have written asking for more articles on the same "clinic" for my advice. It seems that "nervous exhaustion" is the latest fad-name for favorite dodges at the "clinic". All I can say is that I said in the series of articles on the subject. If readers think that I have what "nervous exhaustion" means, then I might as well hold my peace and type and inform typewriter over to the junkman and go to see the movies. Maybe I have been misunderstood. (Ot' Doc Brady).

Sea Food.

Can one derive benefit from sucking the juice of the feet and legs are exposed to the sun? After becoming accustomed to expensive shore dinners, I crave simple food. (A.P.)

Answer—There is benefit to be derived from exposure of even only the face to the rays of the sun-machine. Instructions for Sun Bathing are given in The Brady Book, which can be had for ten cents and stamped envelope bearing your address.

Raw Eggs

Answer—No particular effect, except that raw eggs are more readily digested than egg cooked as you prefer.

Pyle Great Favorite With the Boys at Front

(From N.Y. World Telegram.)

New York, Aug. 16 —Ernie Pyle is "the biggest thing in this war and the hero of the GIs everywhere", said Neil Sullivan, news cameraman just back from the Normandy battle lines, in telling of the adventures of the baby-faced little correspondent who has been taken to the hearts of the boys for his intimate and descriptive pieces from the fighting fronts.

"Gee, what a thrill I got on those kids" said Sullivan, who accompanied Pyle in the invasions of North Africa, Sicily, Italy and France. "They're crazy about him. Every place a correspondent goes, the first question of the soldiers is 'Is Ernie Pyle here?' If you tell 'Yes, Ernie's right behind me here,' the boys start yelling and calling 'Hey, fellows, Ernie Pyle is here'.

"Then the fellows nearest the MPs begin, because the kids rush from the woods and back roads to get near Pyle for a personal chat. One day I was behind him in a jeep and the boys began to line the road shouting 'Hey, Ernie! Hello Ernie!' They waved their hats and held up the butts of their guns for him to autograph. Pyle signed autographs of his column and asked him to autograph them, because some of the soldiers knew Ernie's picture, he is better known to the soldiers than any other correspondent and even better known to them than General Eisenhower himself.

"President Roosevelt couldn't get a better reception from the Joes than Ernie does. I'm an old timer and I never saw anything like it. The different outfits send him invitations to live and eat with them. These invitations come even from the generals."

Sullivan said he last saw Ernie Aug. 3 near St. Lo and that he had all slicked out in a new outfit of GI pants, shirt and shoes.

"But the little guy," the cameraman added, "Ernie went into the Normandy beach with the second wave of troops and I got some cables from Pete Paris, an artist for Yank, that the latter was killed. Ernie stood the rigors of the landing well, better than many younger correspondents."

Ernie is the only correspondent who actually scooped the war," Sullivan went on. "We were going into Cherbourg and Ernie was marked off by smoke from pots on the hillsides. The wind changed and the smoke backward over the American troops and the cry went up 'There goes Ernie Pyle'. Then the shells and the bombs came and surrounded the jeep.

"It seems they want to touch him. Ernie's hair began to look like it had fell into a shower. He's lost all of his clothes."

Sullivan said Pyle was in the same vicinity as Lt. Gen. Lesley McNair when he was killed by bombs from American planes. He said the bombers were dropping their bombs short and were marked off by smoke from pots on the ground. The wind changed and the smoke backward over the American troops and the cry went up 'There goes Ernie Pyle'. Then the shells and the bombs came and surrounded the jeep.

MARMORA

Prompt Action At Threshing Bee Saves Farm Barn

Marmora, Aug. 16 — Prompt action by the participants in the threshing bee at the farm of W. J. Peck in Marmora Township on Monday afternoon saved his barn from destruction by fire. A wagon belonging to Tom McCoy and a wagon rack the property of James Crawford loaded with two tons of grain the property of W. J. Pack were destroyed. The team driven by James Crawford had their hips slightly scorched. Sparks from the engine ignited the straw about 5.30 p.m. but when the chemical engine from Marmora village arrived later the blaze was under control. Water was drawn from the Pack well in milk cans towed in a stoneboat behind the tractor belonging to Mr. Pack. Within the threatened barn was the summer's hay and the day's threshing of grain.

Rapid strides have been made by Donald Neal, son of Mrs. Lindsay Neal and the late Lindsay Neal, of Marmora, since enlisting in the air force at Kingston on January 20th of this year. On July 28th he received his commission at Mont Joli, Que., as a pilot officer and recently spent a few days at his home here, his leave being interrupted through the death of an uncle. Don's many friends are delighted to learn of his rapid promotion. After initial training at Toronto he was posted last spring to Montreal and later to Mont Joli where his graduation took place. His future career will be watched with interest by his Marmora friends. He is at present stationed on the East Coast.

The War Today—

Vast Underground Army in France Is Terrible Menace to Hitler

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

When the citizens of Moscow learned of the Allied invasion of southern France the jubilant cry went up: "Victory this year."

That of course was an expression of vast satisfied rather than a prophecy, but few will be inclined to quarrel with those who entertain the thought. Indeed the government-controlled German radio last night remarked gloomily:

"The supreme crisis has struck. It is the hour when we must throw into battle the last little ounce of strength."

Well, Boche concern certainly is warranted. The relatively bloodless invasion of southern France is "proceeding according to plan." The maquis, the vast underground army, are surging into action throughout France—a terrible menace to Hitler.

The Allies continue to pommel the beaten Nazi 7th army in Normandy and are taking bloody toll from those inside the trap (just how many still are surrounded remains to be seen, but this column will count its chicks when they're hatched). And over on the heaving Russian front the Red armies are about to deliver knockout blows at East Prussia and Warsaw, heart of the great Vistula line which is the last powerful defensive position east of the Reich.

So the Hitlerites are on the skids but at the same time I like the cautionary note in General Eisenhower's summation, yesterday, when he remarked: "It is certain that German forces congregated on our front are taking a sound beating" but added: "We are still a long way from the Rhine . . ."

True the dictator lacks sufficient fighting strength to hold all the territory he's trying to defend. His troops are spread as thin as butter on a hot griddle. But his total forces would present a tough proposition if they were collected in his inner formation.

Thus the Fuehrer's great problem now is to rescue his armies in both France and on the Russian front from impending disaster and push them back. Apparently he still has the bull-headed idea of holding his present positions so long as possible before retreating. He must "change those tactics quickly or the war will explode in his face.

Miss Marjorie Hilchon, bride-to-be of the very near future, was guest of honor at a delightful miscellaneous shower on Tuesday evening arranged by Miss Norlene Frederick, Murney Street. A profusion of gladioli in colorful summer hues decorated the rooms added to the cheery atmosphere. The dining table was beautifully arranged with lace cloth, tall white tapers and presents in dainty pastel shades. The bride-elect found her gifts in Treasure Hunt style, and very graciously thanked her for so remembering her. A very novel idea afforded the girls a great deal of pleasure during the remainder of the party. They made a scrap book in which they pasted the shower cards, below each of which was written the name of the gift accompanying the card together with a verse composed by the girls describing the particular gift. Lastly, a small map of the girl sending the gift was put on also. A very delicious lunch was served at the close of the evening.

Miss Berniece Arbuckle and Miss Heleh Diamond, bride-to-be of the near future, were honored by their fellow employees of the Staff of the Belleville Public Library on Friday night at a miscellaneous shower held at the home of Miss Winnifred McCabe, Dundas Street. Mrs. Arbuckle and Mr. R. R. Stiver gave a short address and presented the guests of honor, seated with gifts, Miss Arbuckle with a coffee table and Miss Diamond with a magazine rack. To everyone present, they both expressed their appreciation for the lovely remembrances. The remaining games followed by dainty refreshments served by the hostess.

Victory Recipes Tested And Approved By Dominion Experimental Kitchen

By LAURA C. PEYPER,
Chief, Consumer Section,
Dominion Dept. of Agriculture

"Pais cannot harm me—I have lived today." Every dinner should leave that pleasant sense of well-being and it's almost sure to when dessert is a luscious fruit pie.

For "mellow fruitfulness" a deep dish apple pie with a cheese-cut crust nears perfection. For that matter any fruit under a golden brown crust is a pretty tempting proposition. Use a deep baking dish and heap the fruit well up in the centre. Sprinkle with sugar and mix in a little cornstarch if the fruit is very juicy. Flavour to taste; lemon juice is always good and a suspicion of nutmeg can do wonderful things. Be sure to slit the crust, for slits aren't just decorative, they prevent sogginess by allowing steam to escape. Deep fruit pies are baked in the lower part of the oven, the crust is brown and the filling cooked, which varies from 25 to 40 minutes depending on the filling. Sometimes a meringue is put on and filling is provided in these recipes from the Consumer Section of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Rolled Oat Pastry

1 3-4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
2 cups sifted pastry flour
1 teaspoon salt
3-4 cup mild-flavoured fat
1 1-2 cups rolled oats
1-3 to 1-2 cup cold water

Mix and sift flour and salt. Cut in the shortening, using two knives or a pastry blender, until mixture resembles fine crumbs. Add rolled oats and mix lightly together. Gradually add water until the dough clings together. Chill before rolling out.

Make 2 double crust, 9" pie and 1 9" shell. Bake shells in a hot oven, 400°F., until light brown about 10 minutes.

Note: For Cheese-Oat Pastry: Divide dough into three portions. Roll out one portion and sprinkle with 3 tablespoons grated cheese. Fold in half and roll out to fit pan. If double crust pie is desired, repeat with a second portion of dough for top crust. Cheese pastre is good on a plum or apple pie.

Blueberry Meringue Pie

3 cups blueberries
1-2 cup sugar
3-4 cup hot water
3 1-2 tablespoons cornstarch
1-4 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon cold water
1 egg yolk
2 tablespoons orange juice
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 nine-inch baked pie shell
2 egg white
4 tablespoons sugar

Bring blueberries, the 1-2 cup of sugar and water to a boil and simmer 2 to 3 minutes. Strain out blueberries. Mix cornstarch and salt with cold water and add to the juice. Cook, stirring until thick and clear. Remove from fire and add beaten egg yolks. Add blueberries, orange and lemon juice. Pour into baked pie shell. Cover with meringue made from egg whites and 2 tablespoons sugar. Bake at 300°F for 15 minutes or until meringue is light brown. Six servings.

Butterscotch Peach Pie
Pie paste
2 cups sliced peaches (about 6 large)
3 tablespoons brown sugar

Line a deep pie plate with rolled oat or plain pastry. Sprinkle the brown sugar on the pastry, arrange the sliced peaches on it and cover with the following mixture:

1 tablespoon brown sugar
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon mild-flavoured fat
4 tablespoons flour
Cream together and spread on the peaches. Pour 1 cup of milk over the filling. Bake in a hot oven, 400°F for 30 minutes. Six servings.

Peach Chiffon Pie

1 baked 9" pie shell
3 medium peaches
2 envelopes plain gelatine (2 tablespoons)
3 tablespoons lemon juice
1-3 cup sugar
1-4 teaspoon salt
1-2 cup light cream, well chilled
3 egg whites

Wash, peel and stone six peaches. Crush, (make about 1 1-2 cups, crushed). Add gelatine and lemon juice, soak 5 minutes, then dissolve over hot water. Add 3 tablespoons of the sugar, and the salt. Stir well and chill until thickened but not firmly set. Add cream slowly to peach mixture stirring well. Beat egg whites until almost stiff; add remainder of sugar gradually, beating continuously. Fold egg whites into peach mixture, turn into shell, and chill. Top with the two remaining peaches, sliced. Six servings.

Note: Egg yolks may be hard boiled and used in salad or sandwiches. Or keep egg yolks, cover with a little cold water, cover closely and keep cold.

BEAUTY By Helen Jameson

Eat Well and Wisely

Taking good care of one's digestive motions, giving them the kind of fuel they need, is one way to take good care of one's complexion. We can't say, of course, that all beauty tummy functions normally she is bound to have a peaches-and-cream complexion. But we do say that if there are intestinal disturbances due to bad eating habits she may be in for any number of facial blemishes—enlarged pores, pallor, sallowness, blackheads or eruptions. For a sake of her health, as well as good looks, one should mind one's groceries.

Nutrition is particularly important in war-time when there is much work to be done, when Uncle Sam's children must keep fit, on Sam's children must keep fit, on what their toes, darling to go. We must eat nourishing food, get the various elements we need, and we must not eat those foods that do not, in a word, but it seems to describe the technique of some busy workers who give themselves five minutes for breakfast, five minutes and hurry through dinner because they are going places.

Vitamin and protein for body repair as well as for nutrition. But too much protein is hard on the digestory system. Eat meat once a day. Other foods that contain protein are eggs, fish, milk, cheese, peas, beans and nuts.

Carbohydrates are important; they are the energy builders. A lot of work goes on within the body, mechanically and automatically. We are scarcely aware of it. That's why.

The Marry-Go-Round

Letter to A CWAC Overseas.

Dear Peg—

I was so glad to hear from you, and to know that you are, safe and working hard. I see those terrible rocket-bombs in my dreams! It's a relief to hear that your biggest trouble is love-trouble. But why a sophisticated modern girl should have to ask her sister and her mother to play her cards to "win" a man is a mystery to me.

My advice is don't TRY! Love is no longer a racket or a "game"—All that subtle fencing went into the discard with the coming of co-education, when marriage ceased to be a get-rich-quick scheme, and husbands ceased to be a financial necessity. I'll wager you make more money, right now, than the Captain does! All you want from him is what you give—honest, frank, reliable bona fide Boy-and LOVE! Isn't it?

So why think of him as a prize loving-cup to be "captured"? The strange girl is weary of being told how to "win" a man, how to "make" a boy friend and how to "get" a husband. Above all, she is getting tired of being told "how to hold a man's love".

Who wants the kind of love that has to be locked away in a safety-vault or kept in a thermos bottle? No sane girl is going to waste her time to keep a weak love alive by artificial stimulation! This business of putting on a show in order to hold a man's interest or to catch his fancy, is as moth-eaten and mid-Victorian as your great grandmothers rag-bag.

A girl is much too busy, these days, to bother with a man who has to be "played up to", blind-folded or bamboozled like a game of six. A smart modern girl can't see why the modern man doesn't say what he thoughts and ideas/in moth-balls and feed a man applesauce all the time. It is order to make him think he is marrying a sweet moron.

If you are a man's TYPE he will fall in love with you no matter what you say or what you do or how you look. And he will love you just as much in an old uniform with your nose all shiny as he will in a tulle dance-dress.

A man and a girl who "speak the same language" and are "on the same wire" don't have to "make conversation" for each other or play cards for each other.

You see, a man's love is like blue eyes or a sense of humor. If you have it, you HAVE it—and nothing can take it away from you. And if you haven't got it there's no way on earth that you can "win" it!

My heavens! This is a long letter. But if it reaches you in time to stop you from trying a "pose" or playing a "show" for the Captain, it will be worth the paper I've wasted. Be YOURSELF, Honey! That's all.

ALLIED LANDINGS ARE MADE ON 100-MILE LENGTH OF COAST OF SOUTHERN FRANCE

AIR VIEW MARSEILLE HARBOR

FRENCH CITY OF NICE

Allied landings between Marseille and Nice are said to indicate the Allied command intends to wheel west toward the Rhone valley, ancient southern invasion route to the heart of France, enveloping both the Toulon naval base and Marseille. Marseille, at the mouth of the Rhone, lies some 420 miles south southeast of Paris and approximately 415 miles southeast of Le Mans. Over 14,000 airborne soldiers preceded the landings from 800 ships. All landings were successful.

AIR VIEW OF TOULON

Fast-Moving Air Battles Over in Several Minutes

By WILLIAM STEWART
(CP War Correspondent)

With the Canadian Forces in France, Aug. 16.—A rare but spectacular sight over the battlefields of Normandy is a dog-fight between our aircraft and German fighter-bombers which seldom put in an appearance unless there is a cloud cover.

Enemy planes make most of their ventures over the bridgehead at night when they are opposed mostly by a tremendous flak barrage but in the daytime they don't get far over British and Canadian-held territory.

When the Spitfires show up the Germans usually high-tail it for home with anti-aircraft fire bursting all around them and the Spits hot behind often flying right through the puffs of exploding shells.

About once a month you can see the Spitfires and perhaps a Typhoon on its way back from a rocket raid of an enemy position out beyond the front to catch a Focke-Wulf 190 or a Messerschmitt 109 out of the clouds and from then on it's like something from the movies.

Because the drone of airplanes is so commonplace, you scarcely bother about it, but your attention is drawn to a dog-fight most of the time by the low thudding of cannon and machine-gun fire in the air and the diving of engines getting their greatest tests.

Probably you'll see only the clouds with patches of blue sky between them for two or three minutes before you can spot one of the darting aircraft.

Then one comes diving into the open, its engine growling but you can't identify it for a second. A Spitfire with is familiar silhouette dives right after it and you glance back to the first recognising then the blunt front nose and squarish wing-tips of an FW.

Electing "Game"

People come running out all around you on the ground to watch with the excitement of hockey fans who see a home-team player break through the opposing defence.

The FW does make cloud cover and everybody drifts away from you talking about the close one that ended-he had. But in about five minutes the sky is full of the same sound and you run out into the open again and this time the battle is in full view.

Two Focke-Wulfs are up there twisting and turning and a third is streaking straight for home. Four of five Spitfires are on top of the two caught behind.

One of them gets on the trail of a Spit and while smoke trails back from the German's wings. Soon you hear the dull rattle of cannon fire and know the enemy pilot got in a burst.

A second Spitfire pops up behind him and it's all over in about five seconds. The two aircraft circle around in tight circles and you can hardly tell which is following which.

The FW. makes a sort of U-shaped manoeuvre. The Spitfire seems only about 50 feet behind. The Spitfire's wings sparkle for a moment and smoke breaks out of the German plane.

The fight is finished before the sound of cannon fire reaches you. The FW. appears to have gone limp. It climbs a bit, one wing droops and then it starts to fall end over end.

During the few seconds that combat has taken, the other German and the second Spitfire have been trying to out-manoeuvre each other. Your eyes turn to them and their background of white clouds. The second enemy aircraft does a sort of figure-eight and the turning Spitfire at one moment has its nose turned in the opposite direction to the enemy's.

Then, just for a second, the Spitfire's nose comes around and sweeps across the path of the Focke-Wulf and you see a red explosion right on the enemy's fuselage. That fight is over too.

The Focke-Wulf rolls half over, starts falling sideways and starts spinning down like a slowly turning wheel without a rim.

In a minute or two the Spitfires are in strung-out formation heading back for their field and you become aware of shouts and handclapping from the spectators around you.

TYPHOONS

An Understatement.

"The valley of death was an understatement" said the group captain.

But before the Canadian troops in the Caen front the Germans have been using a different technique, digging their tanks in hull down and using them a sort of torts with heavy screens of cross-firing guns about them.

"Those are tough nuts to crack," said Davoud. "They are difficult to spot because the German is a master of camouflage and once found they are not good targets for aircraft because the Germans just go below ground and come up when the attack is over and the positions are well protected by anti-aircraft emplacements."

"But," he added, "when that armor is finally on the run—that is where we come in; we'll make a fortune."

The Typhoons can hit an individual tank with two, four or eight rockets which beat cannons for destructiveness and bombs for accuracy. They are twice as fast as the Stuka ever was, carry twice the weight of bombs—two 1,000-pounders—and four cannon. Rockets are alternative to bombs and the bomb-carrying "tiffies" work closely with the "rockphoons."

And from the morale angle the Typhoons are great boosters for our own soldiers and great breeders of fear for the enemy. The sound effect alone is quite something—the normal thunder of a Typhoon engine, the horrifying "swish" of the rocket and then the noise of the cannon. As Davoud himself said, "If I were on a French road and saw a Typhoon coming? Well, I'd write myself off right then."

Canadian Crew of Destroyer Huron On Leave After Seeing Hot Action

By JOHN LEBLANC
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

An East Coast Canadian Port, Aug. 16. (CP)— Veterans of hot action from the Murmansk convoy route to the flanks of the Normandy invasion flotilla, members of the crew of the Canadian tribal class destroyer Huron have returned to Canada on leave and the enemy will probably be happy to learn this.

For while they were hunting trouble up and down the Channel coasts, they sank two of the enemy's ships—trawlers—shared in the destruction of two of his carefully-hoarded destroyers and did damage to several others. In return, their ship absorbed nothing more than a few splinter holes from near misses.

Huron, members of her crew related, also took part in the action off Norway that brought about the destruction of the German battleship Scharnhorst last December. With other Canadian destroyers guarding a convoy, she had manoeuvred into position for a torpedo attack on the Nazi giant, but the Scharnhorst stayed out of range. Later, she was near enough to set the gun flashes as British ships polished off the battleship.

On invasion day and afterwards, the Huron's job was to prowl the western end of the assault area to intercept any German surface vessels trying to get into the English Channel. Another Canadian tribal —H.M.C.S. Haida—was in the Canadian flotilla doing this job.

"We didn't run into a thing on invasion day", said Cmdr. H. R. Rayner, D.S.C., R.C.N., Huron's young skipper, "although we did get a tremendous thrill out of watching scores of planes carrying the airborne troops passing over us a few hours before the dawn of D-Day".

Cmdr. Rayner, who coincidentally is a native of Huron County, commanded the destroyer St. Laurent when it tackled enemy subs in the first wolf pack attack against a convoy on the Atlantic.

The Huron, commissioned 12 months ago, has been operating with a flotilla that, at last count, had sunk 21 enemy vessels and damaged 17 more between the end of April and the end of July. This number includes merchant ships.

EATON GOLD CUP GOES TO U.S. FOR FIRST TIME

James Houvall of Detroit Defeats Balmy Beach Rink in Finals

DOUBLES STARTED

Toronto, Aug. 16—(CP)— Having cleaned up the two major rinks tournaments, entries in the 11th annual Canadian Lawn Bowling Association's championship meet today began play in the doubles competition with 132 two-man rinks entered for first round play.

Also slated for cleaning up today were two secondary rinks competitions for the Ontario trophy and the Toronto trophy. Play for the Ontario trophy yesterday reached the final stage while the Toronto trophy competition was in the quarter-finals bracket.

The tournament premier rinks trophy—the Eaton Gold Trophy—went to the United States for the first time in its history. Last night's final was won by James Hovall's rink from Detroit who defeated a quartet skipped by Charles Haskett of London, Ont. The score was 18-14 in the 21-end match.

In an all-Toronto Henry Trophy final, T. R. Mawson of the Glebe Manor Club defeated A. Stringer of Balmy Beach 16-14. Semi-final winners in Ontario rinks play-offs were Toronto rinks—W. C. Terry of Victorias and C. C. Sage of Toronto—who will play in today's final.

In the Major Gold Trophy semi-finals, Hovatt's Thistle rink downed J. D. Sweeney of Lambton Golf Club, Toronto 19-7, while Haskett's Londoners eliminated W. D. Smith of Chicago 14-13.

In the Henry Trophy semi-finals, Stringer eliminated D. Berry of Ottawa 21-13, and Mawson defeated R. Taylor of Toronto Kew Beach 15-10.

The eight winners of Toronto trophy third round matches were W. W. Smith, Buffalo; M. Sleater, Essex, N. J.; George Yeamans of Toronto; Frank Barnett, Toronto; F. Templeman, Weston, Ont.; J. Voltava, Windsor, Ont.; Alex Halliwell, Mimico, Ont., and J. Minnet, Toronto.

(Unmasked Marvel)

There was a time when "Irish Jerry" Monahan commanded the largest following of any wrestler to appear at the Rumba Arena. Of course at that time the fans didn't know who Monahan was because he was masquerading as the Masked Marvel, wrestler and Jerry made quite a show of it. However, tonight the fans can see Irish Jerry's countenance when he meets the popular Tuer Morgan in the semi-final. The curtain-raiser of a three-bout card brings together Bob Wagner and Pierre Declane, but the scrap, from all indications, is anticipating is the return bout between Frank Sexton, the Pacific Coast champion, and Dr. Len Hall, the Hollywood, villain actor.

New York, Aug. 16 (AP)—Iced "T" formations—or why wait until the Year's day?.... The first football "bowl" game of 1944 was played in Panama Aug. 1 probably in anticipation of the same time in November with Col. Bob Neyland, former Tennessee tutor and Lieut. Col. Fred Thomsen of Arkansas as opposing coaches.... the Mango bowl game in Panama was a tough-tackle game between eight-man teams of the Pacific Panama Canal champions, the coast artillery "Meritators" backed the Panama military force "Jungle Troopers" 26-6 as big John Forzano from Notre Dame connected with 19 of 39 long passes.... So far only the coaches have been chosen for the five bowl games in China.

Nomination Seconded.

Even before the season starts, Sgt. John Derr, sports editor of the "C.B.I. Roundup" nominates Thomsen, two of whose players have won the Congressional Medal of Honor, as coach of the year.... "This guy is doing a great work—for the G.I.'s and officers in China," Derr writes, "and he's responsible for keeping hundreds of good athletes from just going mentally nuts and physically stale out at the end of the line."... As special service officer for the 14th Air Force Thomsen has encouraged numerous leagues in volley ball, favorite indoor sport during the rainy season, softball, basketball, the Chinese National sport. He runs track meets, boxing bouts.... "we try to play games that our Allies play," he explains, "so we'll have some bowling contests, and in basketball we can't let up against the Chinese at all."

JOHNNY GRECO STOPS ROBINSON IN FOURTH ROUND

Makes First Appearance Since Getting Medical Discharge from Army

JEFFRA ALSO WINS

Montreal, Aug. 16—(CP)—Showing an impressive two-fisted attack, Johnny Greco stopped Sugar Ray Robinson with eight-second Ernie (Sal) Robinson of New York, in 2:36 of the fourth round of a scheduled 10-round feature bout here. Greco weighed 144 1-2 to Robinson's 143.

Making his first appearance before a home town crowd since getting his medical discharge from the Canadian Army, Greco looked an improved fighter over the lightweight who earned a decision over New York's Terry Young in his last major fight here.

Robinson went down for short counts in the first three rounds as Greco caught him repeatedly on the ropes with hooking rights and left-handed blows to the head in the fourth.

In the semi-final, Harry Jeffra of Baltimore stopped Dominico Diaz of Puerto Rico in the sixth round of what was to have been an eight-round go. Jeffra, former lightweight champion, had too much steam for Diaz.

Harry Jeffra, 130 1-2, Baltimore, beat Dominico Diaz, 125, Puerto Rico, knockout 2:18 sixth round (8).

William Hells, Millionaire Oil Man, Pays $100,000 for Valdina Orphan

New York, Aug. 16. (AP)—William Hells has a long way to go before he realizes a profit on the money he has paid out for race horses the last year, but the New Jersey oilman definitely is building for the future.

Announcement today that he had given Henry H. Knight, owner of Kentucky's Almahurst Stud, $100,000 for the 7-year-old stallion, Valdina Orphan, boosted Hells' total $750,000 the amount Hells has paid for yearlings, horses in training, stallions and brood mares since jumping into the thoroughbred picture in 1941.

In addition he has acquired a large part of the Raymond Firm, made famous by Harry F. Sinclair's racing farm. Valdina Orphan will be shipped there within a few days.

The new Hells stepped into the yearling sales and paid out $186,000, the highest figure in Keeneland's. This year he laid out $78,200 for seven at the Lexington sales and $67,700 for the best prospects at the Westbury, N.Y., auction.

In between he has strengthened his stable with several proved runners, including Attention and Valdina Zenith, who now races under the name of Zenith Zenith. Attention cost him $50,000.

As against the $750,000 Hells has won only $89,336 this year.

Toronto, Aug. 16.—(CP—It's been nothing but worry, worry, worry for followers of the West Coast this year, according to the Vancouver Sun's sport reporter. The worry has been having a whale of a time in the claiming game, which has led to such transactions reliefed off so fat. The result is that practically none is left to take the place of a horse from one day to the next.

While no fatal cases of heart seizure have been reported yet, some of the punters have come very close to keeling over after the horses leave the starting gate. Exposed:

It seems that Doc Durnan's winning effort in the sculling event at Barrie the other day was a bit of an exhibition, and the word has been sent out that nobody is to take the result too seriously. When the 69-year-old Doc crossed to edge Canada's junior scullers in the race, it occasioned no considerable surprise, and it was understood at most of the others concerned. The sponsors now want it understood that the whole thing was just for fun, and those promoters who were home and dry on Doc's contract can relax and look for other talent. However, it doesn't alter the fact that Doc Durnan still is quite a marvel for his age.

London, Aug. 15—(CP)—A cricket expert says that, in favor of a speed-up of the game, Beverley Lyon took time out from a week-end at Leith to umpire a post-war plan that would include two-day, instead of three-day cricket matches, with play on Sundays. The suggestion, it must be admitted, has shocked some of the oldsters.

The former Gloucestershire captain, referring to cricket as "the best and cleanest game in the world," said: "Paid players are not in football and I see no reason why it should not be played on Sundays."

A Sunday cricket proposal, incidentally, was recently made by a select committee of the powerful Marylebone Cricket Club.

"People have little in the way of entertainment on Sundays," said Lyon. "Parish councils could help . . . And why not a church service on the field on tea by and? I have arranged these at many charity games played on Sundays.

"Imagine how the people of Birmingham, Manchester and Bradford, for instance, would turn up for Sunday cricket, particularly if there were the big county names to attract them."

Concerning peacetime and" wartime matches, he said that "even in the three-day cricket matches, the second day usually was best from a cricket point of view."

Pinching.

The farmer took his small son to market. A prospective buyer was examining some cattle, and Johnny inquired, interestedly:

"Why, that man pinching those bullocks, Dad?"

"He's thinking of buying them, son, and he's making sure they're good, sound meat," replied the father.

The following day the farmer was busy in his yard when Johnny came tearing towards him yelling at the top of his voice:

"Dad, come quickly! The postman's going to buy the cook!"

It's An Ill Wind Eic.

Yesterday Jim (Globe and Mail) Coleman scooped the dope with a story indicating there would be an Armed Services Football League in Ontario and the Trenton R.C.A.F. base would be included in this new proposed set-up. Many big Ontario Navy and three other air force centres, Toronto No. 1 Command, Hagersville (remember Group Captain Dave Harding) and St. Thomas No. 3 P.D. However, Mr. Coleman could have gone even further and named Camp Borden in the set-up also.

Actually this is a sad blow to the O.R.F.U., whose heads had contemplated on the Trenton Navy and Air Force squads for the 1944 gridiron campaign. However, it is an ill wind that blows no person good and it took as though the Bay of Quinte sport fans are in for some bigtime football this fall. If the proposed Armed Services Football League materializes, and all indications point to such being the case, home games for the Trenton "Fliers" will be played on their recreation field around which bleachers could easily be set up.

Reasons Why.

Yesterday we contacted PO. Charlie Box, chief sports officer at the Trenton Air Station, and certain qualified plans had been made for the organization of such a football league. "I was driven to understand that Camp Borden would be included in the Armed Service Football League as well as the other teams mentioned by Jim Coleman. The head officials at No. 1 Training Command at first thought we spoke of team sport organized for the autumn semester as a medium of entertaining the masses, in the armed services as well as in civilian life, and a football game was decried as the best medium to obtain the desired programme," stated PO. Box. "But personally says the proposal would be most welcomed at Trenton. Once we will be looking for civilian support from Belleville, Picton and the surrounding Quinte district when the green light flashes for the football season. Our coach, added Charlie. Incidentally Sergt. Johnny Phillips has been made the business manager of the Trenton "Fliers."

The Personnel.

PO. Charlie Box will coach the Trenton gridders. Flight Lieutenant Toronto stiff is now stationing at Hagersville. Pte. Wes Chandler is commissioned in the R.C.A.F. and stationed at the Trenton Air Station. Pte. Wes Hayman, [illegible] the No. 1 Training Command, would head the Toronto Air Force entry. At a recent meeting the other teams in the loop would be present. P.O. Box (by right) to draft any football material at No. 6 Repair Depot, Mountain View, Centreboro or Kingston, which gives the Trenton entry a wide area from which to select grid material. Wing Commander Hodgins, senior administration officer at Trenton, is very much in favor of the proposed senior football league if for no other reason than to assure the uplift of morale within the armed services this autumn; now that Hitler and his gang are on the run and the boys are anxious to get a crack at the Nazi before they fold.

So all-in-all it looks as though the sport fans of the Bay of Quinte district will at long last have a decent grid team of their own to follow, just like the old days when Belleville ranked among the Ontario leaders. Of course the great Queen's University teams of twenty years ago or more.

What football material is available for a team to represent in this district may be PO. Box's big headache. Others are already called additionalization jobs open at Trenton, Daniels who was with Balmy Beach a couple of seasons ago, is stationed at No. 6 Repair Depot last Trenton, and Ted Robinson, who coll now with the O.P.P., but with an honorable R.C.A.F. discharge in his pocket, available here, Jimmie played with the Garrison "Imperials" in the days of Cron Beach and the gang.

Remember When.

Joseph Arvoid, secretary-general of the League of Nations, presented Sir Malcolm Campbell with the "Cup of Nations" six years ago today after driving a speedboat at 137.4 miles an hour across Lake Constance, Switzerland, the fastest run ever made over the lake.

Coolin' Off.

Manager Wall Gerow must have been looking down to the welfare of his patrons when he hauled down the floodlights and gave the floor of the Rumba arena a good honest soaking today. "There, that should keep 'em off for a while," remarked Walt.

All that it might take more than a bucket of water to cool off Len Hall and Frank Sexton when they mingle in their return muscle-bending act tonight. Hall means business when he promises to be a phoney Pacific Coast champion, but Sexton, in his defence, says he's recognized as the champion and doesn't altogether recognize Hall as even as much as a logical contender.

SOUTH

♣ None

The bidding went like this:

West	North	East	South
2 C	Pass	4 C	4 S
4 NT	Pass	5 D	6 D
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

The opening two bid practically guarantees a game in that hand. The fact that east did not respond at once with two no-trump assures west there is a sure trick in east. Consequently when south hops in with a four spade bid, west refuses to be denied the slam, in clubs. However, if east happens to have two aces instead of one, there is a grand slam in clubs.

The four no-trump by west is the ace and king asking convention. Five diamonds by east is the convention signal for showing only one ace and no kings. Which tells west there is no grand slam.

Knowing the opponents had a small slam in clubs, south decides to take a sacrifice. Although it is bound to be doubled, he figures the loss will not be as great as the pay to opponents for slam.

When west doubles and north passes, south knows that his partner likes diamonds better than spades. Thus, the doubled small slam in diamonds is not disturbed.

West led the heart king. When south saw the dummy cards he almost jumped over the table to kiss his partner. But they had been married so long, it wasn't worth the effort.

Trumping the first trick, south led and lost a spade to west, who returned a club. South trumped that, too. After two trump tricks, a spade was trumped in dummy and south had the rest.

Akinlap was the west player. When that happened, he threatened to give up the game of bridge. But he didn't. They never do if they can find good players.

Somewhere in Normandy, Aug. 16. — (CP)—When Mustangs on a Normandy bombing mission took time out to attack a superior formation of enemy aircraft, two Canadians were among those who marked up victories. Po. H. H. Cush of Calgary, destroyed an ME 109, while P/O. K. B. Benoit of Montreal, assisted an R.A.F. Wing Comdr. to down another 109, and was credited with "half a destroyed". The primary object of the Mustang's mission was to bomb German troops, railway trains and transport.

A JU. 88 fighter was blown up in the air over Normandy by an R.C.A.F. NightHawk squadron Mosquito piloted by Wing Cmdr. J. W. Reid of Sydney, N.S., the squadron commander.

"He was zooming around", said Reid "I hit him with one short burst, and the port motor exploded and he finally crashed in a field of the Seine river and blew up". Reid's navigator was Fl. Lt. John Peacock-Edwards of Westmount, Que., (67 LeCasco St.) who just managed to squeeze his six feet, five inches into the cockpit of the Mosquito.

In the Canadian Bomber Group in England, Wing Cmdr. Eric Hamber, D.F.C., Hamilton, Ont., (11 Chilton Pl.) has relinquished command of the Thunderbird squadron on completion of his tour of operations. Behind Hamber, who is also from Winnipeg (550 Strathcona Ave), are three years of instructional experience at Camp Borden, Ont., a tour as a ferry pilot on the South Atlantic route, and 15 trips with the Moose squadron last year before being posted to command the Thunderbirds in succession to Wing Cmdr. W. H. Swetman, D.S.O., D.F.C., and now a group captain.

Squadrons of R.C.A.F. Typhoon fighter-bombers, based at a forward airfield in Normandy attacked three sets of buildings southeast of Caen which were believed to house German Headquarters, and hammered them flat with bombs.

Aircraft from the "Nomad" squadron, commanded by Sqdn. Ldr. Hugh Norseworthy of Westmount, Que., dive bombed a German Army Headquarters at St. Martin le Pontenay. The attack was led by Fl. Lt. Kenneth Fleet, whose home is in Outremont, Que.

P/O. Charles Burgess of Fredericton, N.B., reported "The Army in the area is on the run" and this group of buildings and they were spattered.

At the same time Fit. Lt. Jack Barnes of Tofield, Alta., was leading the "Wildcat" City of Montreal squadron against what was believed to be a German battery headquarters near Pontenay le Marmion. He said: "We cleaned it."

The third target was an enemy stronghold at Bocquancourt, southeast of Caen, which was attacked by the "City of Ottawa" Beaver squadron led by Sqdn. Ldr. William Pentland, of Calgary, (31 7th Ave., W.). Pentland was forced down by engine trouble en route to the target and the attack was completed under the leadership of P/O. James Beattie of St. Catharines, Ontario.

German Prisoners of War Receive Parcels From Home

"I know what the Canadian prisoners of war receive in their Red Cross parcels . . . but I'm curious about what German prisoners of war receive in the way of parcels from their country". Enquiries such as this are frequently received by the Canadian Red Cross.

Axis prisoners of war in the Dominion receive rations in strict accordance with the terms of the 1929 Geneva Convention. This means that they are fed on the same scale as Canadian troops who guard them. So German prisoners have not the same urgent need of food parcels as Canadians in the German "stalags."

Consignments for Axis prisoners usually come direct to Lisbon and then to their country, but on a few occasions a very small amount have come on the vessels of the British Red Cross "shuttle" service of ships between Lisbon and Marseilles. On arrival in Canada the parcels either go direct to the camps or to some cases to the International Red Cross Committee's delegation in Montreal, who have special storage accommodation for these parcels. This is done so that supplies can be sent to any camp which may have a sudden influx of new prisoners.

Relatives of German prisoners of war held in Canada are able, through the German Red Cross to send the cost one mark each, small parcels known as "Typenpakete", which means standard parcel. The "Typenpakten" weigh from 1 1-2 to two pounds each and are very small number of them, about 1,700 a month, are sent to German prisoners here, as compared with the big consignments of meat of fish and "permits" parcels from this country to Canadian prisoners in Germany. The "Typenpakten" are of three kinds, one containing cigarettes or tobacco, another containing soap and other cleaning materials, and a third containing sweets and biscuits.

In addition to these individual parcels, collective consignments are sent by the German Red Cross. The food sent in the collective consignments includes rye bread wrapped in cellophane, tins of apricots and other fruits, powdered and condensed milk, tins of German sausages of various kinds, some with fish filling, tinned meat and soap. Jam made of berries comes in solid slabs the consistency of table jelly. In addition to the food stuffs, there are collective parcels of soap. This soap is very hard and heavy, with a pungent and peculiar odor all its own.

CHAPTER 13

"But—" Jeanne started.

"But, nothing. It's yours—keep it. I wish Max had really intended it for me. He's a very fine person, Jeanne — but of course, you know that without my telling you."

Jeanne slipped the ring into her purse.

"I'm awfully sorry things happened like they did," she said. "I had no idea that Max would come here. I left word at Rome that I had to leave on an important business matter. He decided to come into Chicago to see you, and was as surprised as I was when he found me here. Where did you go, anyway? I looked all over the place for you."

Errand.

"Oh, I had to go out on a little errand. You were busy, in your room and I thought I'd get back before you missed me."

"Your maid has gone, too. I felt funny in suddenly discover I was here all alone."

"She wanted the evening off — so I told her to go ahead."

You see, Jeanne told herself, there wasn't anything suspicious about it after all. She felt a bit ashamed of her suspicions of Lucia. First about the ring. Then the feeling she had brought her here for some purpose unknown, which turned out to be nothing at all.

But this wasn't getting her job done. She had been told to deliver the envelope and she intended to do it.

"Well I guess I must be on my way, Lucia. I've got to keep my appointment."

"Sure, go right ahead. Come back here to spend the night if you wish."

Despite Jeanne's protests that she'd find a hotel or else go back to Shelton on a late train, Lucia insisted on giving her a pass key for the front door.

Under the light in the front hallway, she examined the envelope again. It was a quite clear and bright now. There was no indication of a number. One was in front of the apartment for a few minutes, then saw a taxi, and hailed it.

"I want to go to 1053 North Robel Boulevard," she told the driver. He touched his cap with his hand, and soon the car was speeding out northward.

Bright Lights.

The girl sank back against the cushions, only dimly aware of the bright lights flashing past the windows of the cab. Her mind was busy with speculations on who she would see, what would happen when she arrived at the address.

She had been purposely slow in getting into the cab and had announced the number rather loudly so if any one were trailing her, as she feared, they would run little risk of losing her.

A part of her mind was thinking about Max — the ring he had intended to give her, and then abandoned suddenly to Lucia when he became angry because he thought she was going out with someone else.

Things had happened so swiftly her mind had been in such a turmoil ever since her errand that brought her to Chicago that she had scarcely realized what Max had said or the meaning of the diamond ring which now was reposing in the bottom of her purse.

He loved her! He must or he wouldn't have bought an engagement ring! The thrill of realization swept over her, and she clutched the bag to her, hugging it as though it were Max instead of a leather purse.

If only he had waited — if only he hadn't decided to come to Chicago and followed onto her in Lucia's apartment! She felt heart sick over the way he had taken her refusal to eat with him.

Of course he wouldn't understand. There was no reason why he should. She had never told him any of her background, or that she was masquerading at the college under a name that wasn't her own.

He had no idea she was involved with the F. B. I. or a gang of traitors whom they suspected of being saboteurs. How he would laugh when she saw him again and had a chance to explain things to him.

For she was confident that by the next time she saw him the personal affairs would be entirely straightened out and she could tell him who she really was and why she had been posing as Jeanne Taylor.

But would she see him again? Max had seemed very angry when he left the apartment. She knew he was fiercely proud. Only a proud man would have acted as he had, tossing a ring aside as though it meant nothing.

Her racing thoughts were interrupted by the stopping of the cab. "Here's your number, lady," the driver said.

Jeanne got slowly out of the cab. There was a street lamp on the parking strip which enabled her slightest act deliberately stood so the rays would shine on her face as she fumbled in her purse for the fare.

If Mr. Brewster men were following her, as she was sure they were, she wanted to be sure about her knew her and where she was going.

"Do you want me to wait, lady?" the driver asked.

"No thank you" the girl answered. "I'll be able to find another cab when I'm ready to leave."

The cab drove away and she walked to number 1053. It was an apartment house. A three story walk-up.

She halfway she looked at the names on the mail boxes and Brewster, it read, apartment 204. She found it. Brewster. M. J. She looked for a button to press, but there was none so she started slowly up the stairs to the third floor.

Frequently she glanced behind her for some sign of Mr. Brewster's men, but saw no one. She heard nothing but the soft noise of her own footsteps on the carpeted stairs.

When she reached the third floor she stopped for a moment, her long legs. She realized that it was more from fright than the climb. She had frequently climbed many flights of steps without scarcely noticing the effort.

There was no choice for it now. She had gone this far and must go on.

The number was easy to find as the hallway was well lighted. She hesitated a moment before the door. Then taking a firm hold of herself she knocked sharply. A man opened the door.

"Yes?" he said inquiringly.

"I'm looking for a Mr. Brewster," she said. "I have something for him."

"Come right in, please," the man said. Jeanne stepped into a well furnished living room. The man shut the door behind her. She knew there were two other men in the room. All of them were young—none seemed as old as thirty to her. They were all well dressed. Two of them had lighted cigarettes in their hands.

"Mr. Brewster?"

All were silent. She felt their eyes upon her. A cold shiver of fear went over her.

"I came here to see a Mr. Brewster," she said. "I have something to deliver to him."

"Sit down, Miss," the man who had opened the door for her said. Jeanne sank into a chair gratefully, for her knees had started to feel weak. "Do you know who we are?"

"No, sir, I don't. Is one of you Mr. Brewster?"

"There is no Mr. Brewster here," the man's voice was cold.

"But I was told to—"

"Perhaps you'd better tell you who we are, Miss. We're all Bureau of Investigation men."

Jeanne sighed inwardly, and relaxed in her chair. Thank goodness, all her fears had been over nothing. She was in safe hands.

"Perhaps we were wrong," one of three of them from the F. B. I.!

It was all clear now. They had got wind of the plot, had worked so fast that they already had the saboteurs in custody. They had waited here to tell her about it.

But her feeling of relief was short lived. Suddenly, the man started shooting questions at her. Who was she? Where did she live? What was she doing in Chicago? How had she come to this apartment?

"But — but, everything's all right," she finally managed to interrupt. "I — I've done nothing wrong."

"That's what we intend to find out," one of the men said. "You say you left Shelton on the seven o'clock train. What have you been doing in the meantime? Where have you been? Whom did you see?"

"Why — why I went to Lucia Ward's apartment," Jeanne stammered. "I met her on the train."

"What did you talk about on the train."

"I — I scarcely said a dozen words. Lucia was chattering on about a thousand things, nothing of any importance."

"Perhaps we're the best judges of that, Miss Hallard. What did she say?"

So painfully Jeanne ransacked her memory and dug up fragments of their small talk. Lucia had regaled her with on the trip to the city. Again and again the three men broke in, went over the same ground, making her repeat what Lucia had said.

She had a feeling that she was getting confused, that what she was hopelessly tangled in the answers she gave. She couldn't remember now, exactly what had been said for certain. The way they shot questions at her made her wonder if she had really come to the end on the same train with Lucia.

"Miss Hallard," one of the men said, "you have told us that you saw no one else at Miss Ward's apartment except her and the maid. Wasn't there someone else there, too?"

"Why — yes, there was. But I don't see that it makes any difference."

"Who was it, please?"

"Capt. Max Bennett." Then she had to tell all about Max, who he was, where he was stationed, what he was to her. To this question she answered merely, "a friend." The questions went on and on, until finally she burst out:

"What is the sense of all this? Everything knows who I am. If you will take me to him, he can clear everything up in a minute."

The three men retired to a corner and consulted, and finally agreed that she should have her wish—they'd take her to Lewis.

"You remember me, Mr. Levering?" the girl said on their arrival downtown in Levering's office.

"Why, yes, I believe I do recall meeting you someplace. Let's see — it was at Mrs. Ward's, wasn't it?"

"Yes, that's right," Jeanne said eagerly. "You know all about me, too, Dr. Clyde told you about me."

"Dr. Clyde?"

"Why, of course, Dr. Douglas Clyde, professor of psychiatry at Hallard college. You know him very well."

Levering seemed so frankly puzzled, that the girl was shocked. "I do vaguely remember having met him some time or other," Levering said finally. "But I doubt if I would know him if he walked in the door here."

For a moment Jeanne thought her heart had stopped beating. Then she could hardly breathe and her hands grew icy cold.

Hadn't Clyde told Levering about her as he had said? What about those messages Mr. Levering had sent? Those instructions? Why had he denied any knowledge of Dr. Clyde. He was the one who had sworn her to secrecy. The man who had brought her the messages he said were direct from Ralph Levering, telling her what to do—how to act.

She had trusted him implicitly. She hadn't told another person. Not even Lucia Ward who she was or what she was doing.

A great suspicion dawned in her mind. Was Dr. Clyde the Nazi agent for whom the F. B. I. had been searching?

Jeanne had become accustomed to keeping her own counsel since she arrived at the college so it was only natural that she didn't mention her recently awakened suspicions of Dr. Clyde.

Then, when Levering told one of the men to see that she was taken to a hotel room and locked up for the night, she didn't mention what was in her mind.

But thought she would turn it over in her mind during the night and reach a decision. A cold one in the cell.

However she had tired her mind to exhaustion. She barely had time to wash her face and get down to breakfast the following morning when she was taken into Levering's office again. Clyde was there, and so was Dr. Douglas, looking very grey and worn as though he had spent a sleepless night.

Clyde eyed her coldly as she entered the room, and gave no sign of recognition, except for a mere nod of his head. He tried to avoid looking at her face and spoke defiantly and his eyes were the first to give way.

Identity.

"All right, Dr. Clyde," Levering said, "let's hear what you have to say for yourself. Miss Hallard tells me that you have known from the start that she is really Vera Dupre of Santa Ana, Cal., that she confided in you.

"She told me a story about meeting a woman in Lisbon who gave her a peculiar sort of finger ring and also a passport bearing the name of Jeanne Hallard. She said she agreed to perform some service, what it was to be, she didn't know, in exchange for this help in getting to America.

The F. B. I. man glanced at his notes and then said:

"She says she confided in you, telling her real identity and that you advised her to remain quiet and that you would consult with me, your very good friend she says you called me, on what she should do.

"Miss Hallard further says that you came back to her with the purported message from me, telling her what to do as she was using the name of Jeanne Hallard. That I thought she might help in the capture of a gang of suspected Nazi saboteurs operating in the vicinity. That I desired have a man guard her at all times, so she would not be in any danger."

He turned to the girl.

"Is that your story Miss Hallard, the one you told me last night?"

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was doing the bridge problem with a shrewd minded expression, saying to pop, "I declare, I've felt so depressed all day and I know it's really absurd because my troubles are how comparatively fortunate I am in these times of storm and stress, but sometimes the weight of the world seems more than I can bare. One helps forget about big problems is that they often have small solutions, pop, and I'm sure I've stands the simple fact of having your breakfast in bed tomorrow morning might color the whole world to-day." Pop looked somewhat dyers as optimistic pink he said, and ma said, "Oh William, are you serious?"

"I'll bring it up to you on a tray, pop said, and ma said, How wonderful, just imagine eating breakfast in bed for the simple carnal reason that I just happen to feel like it. It will be like one of my fondest dreams of earthly form. No doctor in the world could write me out a better prescription, even the greatest specialist. William, you're a genius in human form, she said. "I'll put a geranium on the tray for a spot of color, pop said, and ma said, "Oh William, you are the whole thing is impossible.

When I brought it up pop said, and ma said, It wouldn't be any fun having breakfast in bed with the window shade pulled all a way down, and if they're not pulled down out of the saloons might be able to see in, and everybody knows I'm still sick, so reports would spread like wild fire that I'm neglecting my housework and living like the lazy lily king's court. But never mind, William," the very thought did me a world of good, she said.

If I took you to a movie right now do you think it would complete the cure? pop said.

Ma claiming it would, so they went.

Says German Orders Preparations Against Attack in W. Greece

Istanbul, Turkey, Aug. 16 — Advices from inside Greece said today the new German commander, Gen. Rosler, had ordered urgent preparations against an Allied attack in western Greece and Albania.

Meanwhile it was reported here that the German commander of the Greek Aegean Islands of Samos and Lesbos had ordered his troops to concentrate in the ports of Mytilene. It was not known whether the Germans already were evacuating the Islands, but the concentration of troops in readily available points appeared to indicate an evacuation was probable.

Rosler, who replaced Gen. Schield, is moving all his heavy units out of south Greece leaving only light covering forces, most of which consist of satellite troops, these advices said.

The German heavy defences were being concentrated along the Adriatic coast to counter Russian and lower Albania, it was reported. Along the Greek-Yugoslav frontier German troops have replaced Bulgar forces.

Martel, who commanded the 50th (Northumbrian) Division in France in 1940, was appointed commander of the Royal Armored Corps when the British forces left the continent and his successful creation of the armored forces was responsible in no small measure for later victories in North Africa, Italy and Normandy.

ALLIED PARACHUTISTS DESCEND ON FRENCH RIVIERA COAST

going "over the top" in enthusiasm and receipts.

It was further announced by the president that Jack Linklater, District Governor, would make his official visit to the club next Monday evening and every member was expected to be on hand. Mr. Bowlby also reported that the club would hold a Fashion Show at the Belle Theatre the latter part of September or the 1st of October.

Kiwanis Club Hears Reports On the Karnival

Members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday at the Quinte Hotel listened with considerable interest to the reports made for the annual Karnival, which, as such, is to be held on Thursday evening. Herb Reed, general chairman of the committee, occupied the chair and called on the chairmen of the various sub committees to tell the members exactly what had been done. A lot of good natured banter was tossed across the banquet board but beneath it all was a quiet determination of the members to make this Karnival, one of the best in the history of the club.

A most splendid report was given by Lorne McDougall on the progress made at Roslin Lake, where the club will construct an up-to-date and modern boys and girls camp. This property was generously donated by George Wallbridge and Rt'wards Lorne sold the club that as soon as the transfer of the property is made some work will be completed on the buildings this fall. The speaker also stated that the services of William Waizon, architect, had been secured and it was hoped that probably including ten years of work will be completed in a few years time. That the club can ill afford, will be completed each year. The members were invited to inspect the property, which many have said, is one of the finest camps for a camp in the Province of Ontario.

Jack McVeigh, while he was in the chair, wished to thank all for the splendid co-operation shown, which he was sure would make the Karnival a success. The overseas are pulling on the rope and we here on the home front can pull on the rope, so they will receive the ordinary comforts and know they are not forgotten and the president Herb Reed added his thanks to that of Mr. McVeigh for the help given by everyone and especially to the committee in the various committees. Taylor Frankin, reporting on the bond draw said Jack McVeigh, Secretary on the Hope Chest draw stated both were

SICILY POLITICS IN WILD TURMOIL WITH 9 PARTIES

Writer Sees Long Road Ahead Before Italian Island Ready for Representative Government

By BILL ROSS
(CP War Correspondent)

Catania, Sicily, Aug. 16.— (CP) —You will receive the impression that this island is very active politically", a high official of the Allied Control Commission observed to me recently. Seated in his office overlooking Catania's Cathedral Square, he was explaining Sicily's difficulties in finding her feet politically.

"You have probably seen the billposters, the pamphleteering, the signs chalked and painted in the streets", he went on. "And we see them, too. But our reaction has been, just how much do these things represent the views of the people?"

On the surface, Sicily is in a political turmoil. All of her nine parties, ranging from Communists of the extreme left to Monarchist on the right, are led by vocal, and at times incredibly tempestuous, individuals. Left to right, the parties are Communist, Socialist, Republican, Liberal, Centre, Separatist Liberal, Separatist Movement, Christian Democrats (now called Democ-christian), and Monarchist, but political regrouping is constant.

It appears, however, that these regroupings are seldom concerned with political or economic theory. They are outcomes of petty, personal squabbles. Leaders who are close friends today may be bitter enemies next week. The result is that leaders prominently connected with one trend of thought today are as likely to be in with another; even diametrically opposed, tomorrow, followed by their little cliques and coteries, until they in turn fall out.

Pattern Fascism.

Then, too, as the only political movement many of them know is the Fascist, there is a tendency to pattern the new political organizations and activities after the black shirt set-up. There are dignorcials dress themselves up in colored shirts and semi-uniforms, surround themselves with guards, have elaborate set-ups for maintaining party discipline, and then when the control commissioner hears about it and protests, they proceed to fall out with one another. Socialists and Communists have not fallen into this error to the degree that the other groups have done.

When the Allies hit the island all officials in key positions were acknowledged Fascists. Where it was obvious that these men were respected by the community, they were asked to "play ball" with the Allies, and if they would, they were left in their jobs. The antagonistic ones, the popularity-disliked ones were interned, as later on, were those who failed to live up to their promise. Many who promised to do a good job for the Allies kept their word and today lead lives in office.

As an Italian province, Sicily cannot have a democratic election until one is held for all of Italy, an impossibility until the Germans have been thrown out. But even then she will not be ready for representative government. Shot through with the rot of Fascism it would seem that Sicily has long years of preparation and study before she fully appreciates the meanings of the words "liberation" and "self-government", both so glibly chattered about today.

5,000 ONTARIO WOMEN
ARE URGENTLY NEEDED TO PICK AND CAN THEM

Thousands of tons of tomatoes, corn, pears and peaches will be ripe in two weeks in the fields and orchards of Ontario. These fruits and vegetables represent a Canned Foods which are vitally necessary to our invading Troops and to Canadian homes in the coming year.

5,000 Ontario housewives and other unemployed women and girls, from 16 to 60, will again have to assist in picking and in Ontario canning factories if these precious foods are to be saved. The response of these Ontario women last year was all that averted the loss of much of the 1943 canning crops and a consequent shortage.

There is a greater shortage of help this year. More women and girls are employed in munitions now than ever before. Many of them usually worked in canning factories in other years. They must be replaced.

You will have to do your part in the next 12 weeks. Offer your services now. Give every hour you can spare.

Apply to the Superintendent of the nearest canning factory. If you don't live near a factory, see the Agricultural Advisor at your nearest Selective Service office for full information. Or write, phone or call in person at Farm Service Force, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

No Working Permit is required for this necessary job. Current hourly wages will be paid. The work is not hard. Do Your Part. Act NOW— Today, before you forget.

YANKS TAKE 4 KEY APPROACHES TO PARIS
ALLIES 30 MILES INLAND ON NEW BEACHHEAD

Patrols Heading For French Capital Only 35 Miles Away

Smashing Advance Meeting With Negligible Resistance

By GLADWIN HILL
(AP War Correspondent)

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 17.—(AP)—American patrols approached Paris today in the spearheads of smashing U. S. 3rd Army gains toppling four key cities in an arc only 35 to 65 miles from the Nazi-ridden French capital.

While the Americans pushed toward Paris, other U. S. infantry and tanks captured Palaise and pushed 1,000 yards south, field dispatches said, narrowing the Normandy gap-trap to seven miles. British and American 1st Army troops chopped off the entire western end of the pocket.

Front dispatches said they were meeting only negligible resistance. And Army Takes Dreux.

Dreux is 40 miles due west of Paris and only 35 miles from the capital's suburb of Versailles. Chartres is 36 miles south of Dreux. Orleans is 65 miles southwest of the capital.

One American column crossed the Eure river, presumably above Dreux. Others were two miles east of that road centre, and then pounded on toward Paris.

The Americans had thrown an arc nearly 100 miles long on from the north, west and south. Dreux, Chateaudun, and Orleans, a total of 73,000 on the 1936 census, all fell yesterday. Front dispatches did not estimate it as clear yesterday when Chartres, 338 miles from Paris' suburb of Versailles, was emptied.

Form Northern Gateway.

Dreux and Chartres, a French department of about 25,000 population, from the western gateway to Paris.

The Americans posed a double threat—to take Paris and perhaps also to snare between it and Seine and the channel the German 7th army pulling out of the Falaise-Falaise pocket.

With Falaise captured by Canadian forces, the Normandy pocket fast was disappearing with its neck narrowed to seven miles.

It was the American 3rd Army which thundered across Le Mans and brought up the southern wing of the Falaise pocket.

Now, American columns could be sent northward across the Eure to seal the pocket, formingg a trap on area, possibly forming a trap on the Seine. Seine River bridges have been wrecked by the Allied air, and five spans on the Risle River west of the Seine were struck over-night. The Nazis would have the greatest difficulty pulling their armor and artillery across except over the river over temporary bridges which likely would be easy marks for the vast Allied bomber fleets. 200-Miles Flank Line.

The 200-miles flank to Orleans gave the Allies a 200-miles southern flank along the Loire River. This flank is only some 250 miles northeast of the Allied offensive beating in on the Rhone Valley Riviera.

Headquarters said there was hard fighting east of Chartres.

PULPWOOD DESTROYED

Augusta, Me., Aug. 17 —(CP)— Fire which swept 2,000 acres of woodlands lay blackened and thousands of cords of cut pulpwood, badly damaged for the use of paper mills, were destroyed as forest fires raged the fifth day across central Maine.

French Revolt Grows Against Nazi Overlords

London, Aug. 17 (CP)—Supplied with guns and ammunition dropped by Allied planes, Frenchmen have risen in armed revolt against the Nazis throughout Haute Savoie Province in south-east France, reports from the French frontier at Geneva said today.

Street fighting also has broken out in the important German base of Toulouse, where French Partisans have demanded surrender of the Nazis there, according to dispatches from Irun, Spain.

The Irun dispatches gave this picture of the fighting around Metz as the harassed Nazi overlords:

The Partisans have occupied the Pyrenees railway towns of colom and Mauleon. Heavy fighting is in progress between German occupation troops and Maquis around Pau and Tarbes, between Colorus and Toulouse.

Nearly 10,000 Partisans from the Mediterranean foothills are moving eastward toward the Riviera battlefront to aid the Allied forces.

From the French frontier at Geneva came this description of the revolt in Haute Savoie:

Early today fires could be seen on Mount Salevy just outside Geneva. Just before midnight Allied planes dropped red signal lights to feed the battle. A series of supply drops was said to have landed by the French Jura mountains just in the dark country.

Village after village was liberated during the afternoon fighting as Partisans joined with French soldiers and S. S. units, adding to the chaos in the Nazi fortress.

8 Ill-Fated Corvette-Type Nazi Ships Sent to 'Stop' Invasion Task Fleets

By SUB.-LT. SCOTT YOUNG
(Royal Canadian Navy)

Aboard a Canadian warship off the South of France, Aug. 16 (Delayed) (CP Cable)—From bits and pieces of information gleaned in scraps of English, French and German from recorded Nazi assembly after their own vessel was sunk off the Provence coast, a picture of the pitiful story of how the Germans sent eight corvette-type warships out to meet the great Allied task fleets supporting the invasion of Southern France has been pieced together.

The information did not come from official questioning for most of the prisoners were too badly injured to question. But in periods between fitful wakefulness and uneasy slumber they told voluntarily of the ill-fated little fleet which set out from Marseille with orders to "stop the landing craft trying to approach the coast."

I write this just a few yards from where the prisoners are being treated with pain from burns received when a single salvo from a United States warship turned their 1,000-ton warship into a blazing ball of fire from which only about one-third of the crew escaped.

...These men said one other ship also was sunk, but they did not know what happened to the remaining six.

On information said it became known the day before D-Day that the invasion fleet was en route. Then came orders for the little German fleet to sail. They all left Marseille for the eastward, reached and that this was over for the time being.

The survivors were picked up by United States boats and put aboard this ship where they were attended by our medical officers—Cmdr. A. F. Large of Turonto, and Surgeon Lieut. Hector McDougall of Montreal, together with dozens of sick berth attendants, ordered to look after all of whom ignored watches and pitched in to make comfortable the men who had been ordered out to try to send us to the botoom of the Mediterranean.

KIEL AND STETTIN HIT WITH 5,600 TONS EXPLOSIVES

1,200 PLANES USED

By AUSTIN BEALMER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 17 (AP) — A great fleet of nearly 1,200 R.A.F. heavy bombers dumped about 5,600 tons of explosives before dawn today on the German ports of Kiel and Stettin and lighted great fires among supplies believed destined for the Nazi troops stranded in the Baltic States and in Finland.

At the same time, Mosquitos pounded enemy aircraft behind the western front and cumped blockbusters on Berlin for the third successive night.

Canadian Halifaxes hit Kiel in force shortly after midnight, flying out of the Gulf of Kiel only 20 minutes later a smaller force of Canadian Lancasters bombed Stettin.

Other Canadian heavy bombers engaged in extensive bomber command mine-laying operations.

All the Canadian bomber squadrons were in action in the two-pronged assault on Germany. Reconnoitring Canadian crews reported a fair amount of opposition, from eight fighters and anti-aircraft fire.

Opposition Not Heavy

This fighter opposition generally was lighter than expected, but the widely-separated ports, however — proof of the effectiveness of the tremendous attack on airfields and parked planes in western Germany and the Low Countries by nearly 2,000 British and American bombers during the 36 hours.

The night's operations cost six-teen planes, eight of them Canadian.

Stettin is the chief Baltic port used by the Germans for supplying their troops in Finland and is the principal Nazi naval base in that front. The city, with a pre-war population of 380,000, is the seat of the Nazi Gauleiter, Franz Schwede-Coburg, and has important chemical and industries.

Last Attack January 5

Stettin was last attacked in strength by the R.A.F. on the night of January 5.

"The whole port seemed to be on fire," said a bomb aimer back from the Kiel operations. "Flames licked from the fires and when we left there was a pall of smoke 10,000 feet. Isolated fires creeping out to merge with the others in the middle."

Kiel, headquarters of the German fleet, was hit twice in three days earlier this month by American heavyweights—on August 4th., and August 6th.—and was heavily bombed by the R.A.F. last month.

One of Heaviest Robomb Raids In Two Weeks

London, Aug. 17 —(CP)— Rescue squads removed dead from the debris of houses and shops, from wrecked buses and street pavements today after one of the heaviest night barrages of flying bombs in two weeks.

The attacks were resumed at dawn as the rescue work continued.

For several hours last night the R.A.F. fighters shot down robots across the channel as frequent intervals. The R.A.F. fighters shot down robot missiles.

At places on the south-east coast, bathers, and picnickers seeking respite from the flying bombs inland, anti-aircraft shells sprayed the sea for a mile or so offshore.

One robot fell on the busy cross streets of one south England town at shopping time yesterday, killing a number of persons and injuring others.

Allied Armies To Occupy Japan and Germany Even If Resistance Collapses

By HOWARD FLEIGER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Aug. 17.—(AP)— President Roosevelt returned to Washington today from a 16,000-mile war trip into the Pacific to declare that Allied armies will drive in and occupy Germany and Japan even should resistance collapse short of complete victory.

It was the first definite assertion that Germany and Japan will not be able to use the Allies' ultimate goal—unconditional surrender—to keep Allied forces out of their homelands.

This time, the President said, Germany will not escape the military occupation which she dodged by armistice in the First Great War.

Mr. Roosevelt made the statement to a news conference aboard his special train as it approached Washington at a time when Allied forces were pushing ashore in powerful new landings on the southern coast of France.

Back in Washington

Mr. Roosevelt — back in Washington after a 35-day absence that took him to Hawaii and the Aleutians where his ship skirted within 600 miles of Japanese territory—planned to discuss his Pacific tour as soon as possible with Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

He also will meet promptly with representatives of Congress, he said, but he does not intend to make a formal report to Congress.

The President's return to Washington spurred immediate speculation over the possibility of another meeting soon with Prime Minister Churchill of Great Britain. It has been their custom to confer at intervals, the last one every six months, and the last time they were together was in December.

With the fighting in France rolling at its present pace, it seems logical to those close to the government that the two Allied leaders will meet again in the not-too-distant future to plan a massive new drive.

Just whittled (blanks)

Mr. Roosevelt said he knew nothing of internal troubles in Germany that can make us feel sure the German war machine will blow up early. We hope there will be trouble in Germany, he said, but that may turn out to be wishful thinking.

He said there is an interesting psychology among not only of the German people but of their military command—a characteristic to throw up the defenses as the borders are menaced because they don't want Germany ever—not They quit before we got in the last time, he pointed out, but they quit in the second invasion this time.

If we let them quit, he added, then the next generation will be told they never won the war.

Seal Off Japan.

Turning to Japan, he said that the Japanese are being cut off from the peace-loving world until she becomes better willing and able to live with peaceful countries.

The United States campaigns —with the exception of Burma—the major responsibility of the United States, will be stronger than Allied countries such as Australia and New Zealand.

Amplifying the theme of his Saturday speech at Bremerton, Wash., Mr. Roosevelt said permanent defenses must be spread the full Pacific from the Aleutians to the Antarctic—a task of many, many years.

MAIN OBJECTIVE ON FRENCH ISLE PROVES 'PHONEY'

Landing Parties Find Stove-pipes, Cardboard, Log Camouflaged as Guns

FIGHTING ELSEWHERE

Note: In the following dispatch, Sub-Lt. Scott Young of the Royal Canadian Navy describes the role of Canadian assault craft in the Allied invasion of Southern France. Young formerly was a writer for the Toronto Globe and Mail.

By SUB-LT. SCOTT YOUNG
(Royal Canadian Navy)

In a Landing Craft off Southern France, Aug. 16 (Delayed) (CP Cable) — Canadian assault craft touched down on the beaches of France and on the south coast of France and on the mainland itself today in one of the most amphibious operations of the war.

Landing craft from one ship carried mixed Canadian and American troops in another, and British troops in a third while others with combined operations personnel carried French Commandos, to two points on the French mainland about 25 miles east of Toulon.

All the landings were practically unopposed but there was heavy shelling later on Tuesday.

The strangest assault in the annals of the operations both of them recognized in pre-assault plans as keys to the defence of Toulon, the strength of the French coast a few hours later.

Both Canadian ships carried highly specialized troops trained for specific jobs of destruction which the Allied commanders had decided must be carried out on the scale landing Four Shore Guns Freeing.

The main object of the troops carried by the first ship turned out to be a battery of four 150-millimetre guns which could have caused considerable damage to the main landing force—had they been real—which were the main objective of the Allied landings. But there were two stovepipes, a piece of cardboard and a log of wood.

At the other end of the island, where there were no known military objectives, bitter fighting developed. Casualties were not low.

The phoney guns were as well camouflaged that dozens of reconnaissance planes on which the operational plan was based failed

RUSSIAN TROOPS WITHIN 3 MILES OF EAST PRUSSIA

Forces Attacking on Both Sides of Lithuanian Town of Virables

PROGRESS REPORTED

London, Aug. 17 —(CP)— Russian troops within three miles of the East Prussian frontier, attacking on both sides of the Lithuanian town of Virbalen with strong tank and plane support, the Soviet communique announced today.

"Fierce fighting continues," the German communique said.

Virbalen, 10 miles south of the East Prussian rail centre of Insterburg, where iron foundry and machine shops are turning out shells away by five rail lines. It is 22 miles from Kingsberg, the main Prussian capital.

Troops of Gen. Ivan Chernikhovsky's front been engaged in a fierce battle with the German garrison within the old city of the East Prussian frontier for more than two weeks, and the Germans' counter-announcement was the first intimation they had started their offensive.

Other Russians imperil the wild, tangled forest country of East Prussia on the south, and east have reported battling furiously to within certified belt within 21 miles of the communications hub of Kaunas.

Progress Reported.

The Soviet-reported Russian progress in the Carpathian slopes, saying "the Soviets are attacking northwest of Kirlibaba, south Polish city 21 miles north of the Rumanian frontier. That advance threatened the Polish cities of Tarnow and Krakow, 50 miles to the nortaeast to Krakow. Other troops to the northwest of Krakow, within 30 miles of Krakow, fifth city and ancient capital of Poland, "are fighting for offensive fighting" was reported in the big bend of the Vistula river.

Continued Russian advances were reported by the German "west of Lake Palucy," where the Russians are compressing and backing away at a trapped German force estimated as high as 20 divisions. Some evidence that the Germans are attempting a flanking thrust across lakes Peipuss and

CANADIAN TANKS AND INFANTRY MEN CAPTURE FALAISE

Seizure Climax To Ten-Day Drive By Canadians Down The Caen-Falaise Road

BITTER FIGHTING

By ROSS MUNRO
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army in France, Aug. 17.—(CP Cable)—Under a cloak of the deepest secrecy covering most military operations in northwest France for two days, the Canadian Army launched an attack eastwards with strong forces and our troops are now over the Dives River.

This now offensive, which could be the biggest battle in Normandy so while Falaise was being attacked and captured, with the Canadian infantry and tanks, Falaise, major road centre which flanks the northern exit of the Normandy pocket escape gap, fell to Western Canada forces which finished the capture of the city during the night and this morning.

At three o'clock this afternoon (9 a.m., E.D.T.) the handsome news of the new push was lifted and the story can now be told.

Caen Is Outflanked

The town of St. Pierre on the east bank of the Laize River, 15 miles north-east of Falaise and 15 miles east of Caen, has been captured in this spectacular swing to the south. The fall is on the Falaise-Lisieux road which now is cut in a dozen places.

French, Aug. 16. Pierre-Dan highway, was captured two days ago and Canadians have been fighting on to the area of Meadon, important railway centre four miles north of St. Pierre.

Between St. Pierre and Falaise other forces got over the river at the village of Jort, three miles south of St. Pierre, and pushed on into wooded hilly country.

Capture Of Falaise Completed

Fighting is going on in the Meadon area and all along this eastern flank of the pocket as the whole front has blown wide open.

British troops are playing an important part in this new drive directed by Gen. Crerar.

Two days ago the ban was imposed on news of the capture of Falaise and movements east of the Canadian-Argentan-Le Mans line and the Canadian-American junction operations of Canadian troops attacking from the north and east while others closed on the city from the south and southwest.

At 1.45 this afternoon (7.45 a.m., E.D.T.) Canadian army headquarters announced that the Western Canada infantry and tanks which had entered through the city during the night and this morning, had met strong resistance as German holding out to the end in buildings has now been achieved and the Canadian flag flies in Canadian hands.

Falaise, key of the city is the climax to the Canadian army drive down the Caen-Falaise highway which began ten days ago.

A Great Success

Now that they have gained Falaise, the 1st Canadian Army's first full-scale offensive has been a great success.

The Canadian into Falaise started yesterday, putting Western Canadians into one of the bitterest fights since the battles just south of Caen.

In the north edge of the escape gap, the city was first surrounded. Then fighting developed through the streets and the final mopping up of snipers and machine-gun nests.

The Germans had anti-tank guns, machine guns and rifles hidden in the wrecked buildings.

The Ante River, which swings through the town from the north-east, was the greatest obstacle, but Sherman tanks, carrying the Canadian and Canadian infantry worked their way over and into the streets of Falaise, covered by the fire of other tank squadrons sitting on the slopes in front of the city.

12 Bridge Girders Stolen

Strong Air-Borne Units Join With Assault Infantry

Invasion Forces 10 Miles From Naval Base of Toulon

By NOLAND NORGAARD
(AP War Correspondent)

Rome, Aug. 17 — (AP) — Allied troops have punched out a solid front 50 miles broad and about 10 miles deep along the coast of Southern France, American 7th Army headquarters announced today.

On the west the invasion forces drove within 10 miles of the historic old fortified naval base of Toulon. On the east they were within 10 miles of the picturesque resort of Cannes. The invaders, 2nd by three veteran French divisions and supported by heavily armored French forces, had seized an area of approximately 500 square miles, Cannes Entered Says Berlin.

The German communique said the Allies already had penetrated Cannes. German broadcasts reported air-borne troops had landed northwest of Cannes and entered the town after fighting. It said although the Germans declared they were shelling the town from nearby heights, broadcasts indicated they had little hope of holding the town where Napoleon landed in 1815 to begin his famous 100-day campaign).

The Allied announcement listed ship-other towns in Allied hands—the important towns of St. Tropez, Ste. Maxime, St. Raphael, Frejus and Le Lavandou, and the fine communities of Le Muy, Le Luc, Lorgues and Collobrieres.

50-Mile Front

"The swift advance of American and French troops inland continues and numerous additional villages and towns have been taken," Gen. Patch, 7th. Army commander, announced.

"All elements of the beachhead forces have been joined to form a continuous front arching inland with anchor points 50 miles apart. The beachhead itself now embraces some 300 square miles.

"Junction with strong air-borne units dropped far behind the enemy lines before dawn on D-Day has been effected.

"French and American reinforcements, including armor, are pouring ashore. Casualties continue exceptionally light."

The landing of assault infantry which landed from the sea and the huge air-borne force landed behind the Allied beachhead island communication arteries which the parachute troops had seized and which they block, and that these beachforth and south for the swift advance funneling of men and supplies into the rugged Alps of Provence in the drive northward.

Link up with Comrades

Another force previously linked up with French Commandos who had landed on the flanks of the main invading force to block side avenues to the beachhead.

It thus was evident that the Allies within 48 hours after their landings had achieved an astonishing success in seizing the primary objective for a large scale operation.

With tanks and mighty M-10 tank destroyers ashore it was also evident that Gen. Patch was in a position to withdraw the forces and danger ahead—the period in the first 72 hours when the enemy might mass armored reserves to make a counter attack.

But so far there was little evidence to show that the German were massing such such counter-attacks.

Destroyed Truck Convoys.

Thunderbolts intercepted and destroyed one convoy of 25 enemy motor trucks moving field guns toward the battle area, leaving at least 6 of the vehicles in flames and the others damaged.

On the contrary, there were signs that the Germans nervously were preparing for an extension of Allied landings.

Crews of British bombers reported that Nazi troops had left Turin (which the Germans already have abandoned) and Genoa, Italy's chief seaport, apparently were in process of being evacuated.

Similar-scale enemy movements also were started between Nice and Imperia, on the coast just inside the Italian border.

Other fires were reported roaring along the Italian Riviera.

Weather Forecast

TWO SAILORS BEEN IN ON KILL OF 24 U-BOATS

Cook told of seeing two destroyed.

H.M.C.S. Prince David Landed French Commandos 6 Hours Before Assault

By DOUG. ROW
(C.P. War Correspondent)

Aboard H.M.C.S. Prince David off Southern France, Aug 15 (Delayed) (CP Cable)—The land-craft moved into the silent beach. Soldiers poured ashore and disappeared in the darkness and the French were home again.

Canadian and British sailors landed these French commandos on a beach east of Toulon a few hours before the giant main assault broke against the Riviera beaches a few miles away.

Little assault craft travelled the approaches of the coast all night, literally inching the last quarter mile to complete the success of the operation that depended on stealth and worked perfectly.

I went in with a craft under Lieut. George Allin of Edmonton, the veteran of the North African, Sicily and Normandy campaigns, and returned seven hours later. The mother ship which came through the Normandy operation with us without a scratch, and did the same thing here.

As a trip it was a mixture of suspense, monotony and pleasure. The monotony of the long unhurried ease of landing that gave all approaches of the beach a sense of sapping.

These French troops, returning to fight on their native soil, went in with the heavy tack of knocking out gun batteries and pocky Caen Negre, and machine-gun positions on the beach, and aiming at high ground dominating the coastal road to prevent the Germans from reaching the main assault beaches to the east.

There were dark Arabs, Berbers who danced native African times to the music of a modern Broadway band.

CITY MARKET PRICES GENERALLY UNCHANGED

Little change was noted in city market prices although a larger than usual amount of Thursday produce was offered.

Canteloupes and watermelons held the Tuesday levels, selling at between 20 and 75 cents each, according to size. Tomatoes priced at $1.00 the bushel, while basket lots also offered at commensurate prices.

Potatoes were $2 the bushel or 20c the peck. Corn was plentiful and brought 10 cents the dozen or dozen ears. Astrachan apples sold at 15c the berry box with cooking varieties offered at 25c the six-quart basket. Blueberries and blackberries were quoted at 30c the box, with new pickling pears offered at 30c the six-quart basket.

HIT-AND-RUN DRIVER DAMAGES ANOTHER CAR

Bernard Rorabeck, Wellington, complained to police yesterday that the left side of his motor car had been damaged by a hit-and-run driver on the bay bridge road. Mr. Rorabeck told police that while parties lies he was about to pass another motor vehicle, while proceeding northerly there, another motor automobile roared past him from behind, striking the side of Mr. Rorabeck's car as it sped away towards the city without returning to the scene of the accident.

GIRL IS FOUND SLEEPING IN CAR

Found sleeping in an automobile on Campbell Street, 20-year-old Grace Hewton of Wellington, was taken into custody by patrolling city police shortly before 2.30 a.m. today. The girl is said by police to have entered the parked automobile and proceeded to obtain a night's rest when patrolling police happened to see her lying on the rear seat. At the police station Miss Hewton admitted to having slept in parked automobiles in Belleville every night this week. She was remanded to the custody of the county jail on a non-bail charge of vagrancy to appear next week.

At the other end of the island, however, the Germans mainly used automatic weapons, backing them up with mortars.

This ship's sight landing craft delivered their troops and later medical personnel, supplies and ammunition without a casualty.

As far as I can learn now, a couple of machine-gun bullets which zinged over the craft on which I travelled to the assault beaches—a craft commanded by Lieut. Jim Flynn of Vancouver, B.C.—were the closest any of us came to getting hit.

Sneak Assault in Rubber Boats.

We carried a colonel to within about 1,000 yards of the assault beach, then transferred him to one of the silent manually-paddled rubber boats in which the sneak assault was made successful.

This big navy is sound inshore until daylight, listening to sporadic fire and hanging around on radio for expected directions to act as gunnery spotter for an American cruiser or destroyer.

The instructions never came, however, as the cruiser bombarded in daylight when the crew were able to make their own range corrections.

At daylight we went in on the beaches and spent the rest of the day picking up wounded and unloading supplies.

Roughly the same procedure was followed by other craft commanded by Lieuts. Jack Stock, Toronto, B.C., Gordon Hendery, Westmount, Que., George Nutall, Calgary, Alb., Bill Lee, Oshawa, Ont., AB. Ken Cochrane, Saint John, N.B., and Leading Seaman Pete Duchnicky, Port William, Ont.

Lee's craft took medical personnel to the beaches about 2:30 a.m.—an hour after zero hour—but encountered fire forced him to pull off again and delay his landing until 6 a.m. With him were AB's Herb Smith, of British Columbia, Ray Parsons, Windsor, Ont., Terry McAdoo, Moncton, N.B., and Stoker Vernon McIntyre, Louisburg, N.S.

H. Genteletti, ~ Given 3 Years For Cottage Robberies

Harold Genteletti, 36, of Montreal, was sentenced to serve three years in the Portsmouth Penitentiary, when he was convicted of breaking and entering summer cottages at Oak Lake and stealing therefrom. Norman Milotte, 20, who also gave Montreal as his residence and address and accomplice of Genteletti, was given a total of 18 months in the Ontario Reformatory by Magistrate J. L. Loyd.

"Genteletti and are not of much use to society. Already you have served two terms in the Penitentiary as well as having been interned for making subversive statements", stated Magistrate Lloyd prior to meting out sentence. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan informed Genteletti's list of previous court convictions in which was listed a conviction for theft registered at the Belleville police court under the name of Harold Bartolokiolo on Feb. 22, 1927, at which time he was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. When he and Milotte appeared in court Genteletti charged together Magistrate Lloyd enquired why such proceedings. When Mr. Donnan read the list of previous convictions it was disclosed that Genteletti had been convicted of escaping custody at Port Arthur in 1939. "That's why they were shackled", revealed Mr. Donnan.

Milotte's record showed he only had three minor convictions and he also addressed the court stating leniency. His Magistrate gave the latter 12 to 18 months in the reformatory on each of two charges to run concurrently.

They were charged with entering the cottages of W. B. McKay and I. W. Pringle at Oak Lake, and stealing therefrom. On the McKay cottage affair Genteletti was given two years and on the Pringle charge one year, totalling three years in all to run consecutively. Genteletti was heard to mumble some verbal protest against the judgment as he was led to the prison cells below the court room. Provincial Constable Jas. Driscoll preferred the charges.

Kiwanis Karnival Extended To Fri. Due to Rain Dispersing Large Crowd Early Last Night

War Worker Contest Attracts One of Largest Crowds Ever Seen In City

SPLENDID PROGRAM

The Belleville Kiwanis Club announce that due to unfavorable weather conditions, the Karnival has been extended to Friday night, Aug. 18. Draws for prizes scheduled for Wednesday night will be held tonight. The major draw of the $1,000 Victory Bond and the Hoop Chest will be held on Friday night instead of Thursday night as formerly scheduled.

It was well until the rain came. The Belleville Kiwanis Club, having the feeling of their friends from the rural districts in mind, felt the great qualms, when "million dollar drops" started that it placed a question on what was considered one of the largest crowds to attend a carnival in Belleville.

It could not be done. The Karnival had been extended one day and that is only a difference of opinion between friends.

But to get back to the Karnival.

The big news is the fact that Miss Dorothy Browne, pretty Bellevue Industries employee, won the title of "Miss War Worker, Belleville", from a field of seven contestants.

Second was Miss Helen Salisbury, brown-haired lass also from the Reliance Company.

In third place was Miss Mildred Day, of the Deacon Bros. Ltd., while her running mate Miss Shirley Tapp of the same company, annexed fourth place honors.

Contest Very Close

The contest was closer than the by-lawts, the Club had originally prescribed pup. Time and again, the judges awarded before the decision of the judges before any definite decision could be made. The contest was strictly noticeable, when the field narrowed down to four entrants. And in fairness to the contestants it must be said that the judges had a very difficult time in the first voting of the judges.

But it was fair, and there were more contestants than polled in the huge crowd that watched proceedings from the grandstand, smiling girls who were eliminated earlier in the contest. They crowded around Miss Browne and her fellow prize winners, hugged and kissed them and offered their hearty congratulations. The girls were splendid "sports" regardless the matter and must receive their quota of credit.

There isn't any doubt left in the minds of Chairman H. H. Reed, in charge of the contest, and the hard working Kiwanian colleagues, that Belleville's workers are interested in war-aid with Mr. and Mrs. John Public including a plentiful supply of the "jitterbug".

Upwards of six thousand widdies and residents of the city and district jammed the Pinnacle-Bridge intersection today for a look at and cheer their various favorites as they marched in colorful review around the stage. They were there as early as six-thirty to get "rolling" and when they stayed until the winner eventually stepped down from the stage with the blue and white sash that proudly bore the inscription, "Belleville. Miss War Worker, 1944."

Centre of Attraction

While the pretty representatives of Belleville's war industries received their share of attention, Miss Dorothy Stone, attractive "Miss War Worker, Toronto," was one of the outstanding centres of attraction. Miss Stone, a brown-haired, green-eyed beauty, found her dimpled smile and instantly won the hearts of all with whom she came in contact.

There is nothing of the "high-hat" about Dorothy. De Havilland Aircraft Company's beauty. She was as much at home conversing with Belleville's war workers as she was with her own pals in the De Havilland plant. She chose no favorites and distributed her charm and smiles to all and sundry. After the judging she mingled freely with the crowd in the "Street of Chance" and her personality won her thousands of friends among the throng that came to see her.

She was formally presented to the huge audience a few minutes after her arrival at the scene with her fellow judges, Lieutenant-Commander J. McLeod, officer commanding the Mohawk Air Station, Deseronto and Flight Officer J. Bristol, R. C. A. F. (W. D.) Mountain View, Master of Ceremonies Ted Schwab handled manners in his usual masterful way from the platform, and introduced not only the judges but the individual contestants as well.

Chairman Quite Busy

Kiwanian Vic White, chairman of the War Worker Contest, had his worries and work, and came through with flying colors. He presented the less fortunate contestants with handsome boxes of candy and officiated at the presentation to "Miss Toronto" of a lovely gift of Kiwanis appreciation.

Over the microphone she graciously thanked the Club for the gift and paid a fine tribute to the Belleville war workers.

Later President Jack McVeigh expressed the appreciation of his club to the part played in the Karnival by Belleville's war industries and Dorothy Stone.

And lucky seven it was. The pretty Reliance worker carried the number through to the title, and the last one to prize to convince her that seven is not lucky is due for disappointment.

Naturally, she was excited, when she was chosen the winner. By nature shy and modest, she refused to say much about her good fortune. In fact she was more interested in the bouquet of beautiful red roses at the moment than in the honor. Which both girls love.

Her fellow contestants crowded around her as she approached the stage. They hugged her and some kissed her, which after all is the feminine way of expressing congratulation. Fellow workers of the Reliance Industries crowded about her offering felicitations.

"I'm just lucky, that's all," was her brief comment.

Then another big moment in Dorothy's life occurred. Dorothy Stone, Toronto's Miss War Worker, asked her to pose for a photograph with her. The two Dorothys made an attractive picture as a photographer's bulb flashed. The two winners chatted as if they had known each other for years. But after all, it isn't every one, who can win titles like those the two beauties.

Then it was all over. The girls scrambled, Miss Browne accompanied by friends, and wearing her badge of victory, disappeared through the "Street of Chance." Another War Worker contest was over.

Miss D. Browne Wins War Worker Karnival Contest

Thirteen pretty Belleville War Workers, bedecked in their colorful cover-alls stood in a little group inside the Armouries Wednesday night chatting with suppressed excitement. Within a few minutes they would parade before the eyes of six thousand waiting people, and more important before the eyes of critical judges.

It was a sort of mutual admiration society. The girls appraised each other and wished each other luck.

Aside quietly, chatting with friend, stood blonde Dorothy Browne, attractively garbed in the blue-and-white regalia of the Reliance Industries.

A hum of excitement came from the group as Chairman Vic White, of the War Worker Committee, approached the girls, cardboard numbers in hand.

"Lucky seven" is no superstitious" he smiled as he presented each girl with her placid number.

Lieut. Jack Stock Seriously Burned On Norman Front

Transferring from the Royal Canadian Artillery to the Armored Corps in order that he might get into the thick of World War No. 2 more speedily was the choice of Lieut. John S. Stock, son of Mr. Harry Stock, Victoria Ave., in this city. Lieut. Stock landed on the beaches of Normandy on D-Day and was well to the fore, when the courageous Canadian Army swung towards Caen.

However, yesterday word was received here by his father announcing Lieut. Stock had been seriously wounded, while in front line action. The official information revealed Lieut. Stock had been burned about the face by first and second degree burns. No other information was received by his father. It is believed Lieut. Stock's armored vehicle must have received a direct hit from enemy shell fire.

Lieut. Stock was commissioned in the Brockville Officers' Training Centre as an artillery officer. However, he later transferred to the Canadian Armored Corps in order that he might proceed overseas more speedily. Lieut. Stock was educated in Belleville and while at the Belleville Collegiate Institute stood out as a star rugby football player prior to his enlistment. He also played basketball with the Collegiate quintette.

Former City Resident Composes Band March 'Belleville Citadel'

A former Canadian National Railway clerk here, Captain Arnold Brown, now a member of the editorial staff of the "War Cry" official Salvation Army organ, has composed a march that has been accepted for publication by the Salvation Army Board of Music Publishers.

The march "Belleville Citadel" is dedicated to the fine place of worship erected by the Salvation Army here a few years ago.

The composer has studied music under the late Mr. Pricker, former conductor of the famous Exhibition Chorus, and for many years the conductor of the Metropolitan Church, Toronto.

The march will be one of the musical features at the Salvation Army's annual music camp which opens at Jackson's Point next week.

Ten years ago, Captain Arnold was employed in the office of the C.N.R. superintendent here. He left for Toronto when he entered the Salvation Army's training school for officers.

He has recently returned from New Foundland where he was engaged for three weeks forming a music camp in the Old Colony. This is the first venture of this nature in Newfoundland by the army. Captain Brown, in this instance, conducted a band of eighty musicians.

Lieut. J. E. Davis, Reported Missing, Prisoner of War

Trenton, Aug. 17—Reported missing nearly in July, Lieut. J. E. Davis (Roger said to be a prisoner of war, according to a letter received here by his wife, who lives at 30 Alberta St. A private from the same unit as Lieut. Davis, and who is now in hospital in England, is said to have seen Davis taken prisoner by the Germans in Normandy while he was left on the battle field for dead.

Lieut. Davis, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Davis, enlisted early in the war with the Hastings & Prince Edward Regiment, but was only posted overseas last spring, when he was one of several Canadian officers loaned to British Regiments.

A brother, Fred, with the Canadian Navy and four brothers-in-law are also in the service. They are Sergeant V. Wannamaker, Pte. E. Wannamaker and Pte. A. Belzar all serving in Italy and Sgt. Probert with the R. C. A. F. in Canada.

Money for Red Cross

Red Cross funds this week are the richer by the sum of $6.92 as the result of several energetic children in South West Trenton. A show held in the yard of Allan and Billy Berry, Shuter St. netted the sum of $1.07, while a covered-wagon stage play presented by several other children, under the management of ten year old Sturgess Leavey with Walter Wilson, Paul Ash, Oliver and Joan Frost as assistants netted $4.85. The children went to considerable trouble in arranging costumes and served the guests sandwiches, pie and soft drinks at an entrance fee of three cents up.

Manager Sturgess Leavey has a brother and two sisters in the service and therefore has a special interest in assting the war effort. His brother, Albert, has been with the Royal Canadian Navy since the outbreak of war serving in many of the landing operations, while a sister, Muriel, is an L.A.C. with the R. C. A. F. at Paulson, Man., and another sister, Helen, is with the C. W. A. C. stationed at Montreal.

Gerar Tretault was fined $100.00 and $15.00 costs for having a quantity of liquor purchased in Quebec in his car. Default of payment three months. He paid.

Seven others paid the usual $10.00 and costs for breach of the Liquor Control Act, and one paid $2.50 for breach of the Dog by-law.

Canadian Army Needs 40,000 Men Recruiting Officer Tells Karnival

Stating that the Canadian Army needed 40,000 men immediately to reinforce the fighting troops in Italy and France, Captain A. Brooke, of the Recruiting staff of M.D. No. 3, Kingston, made an eloquent appeal for active service volunteers to the large crowd at the Kiwanis Karnival last night.

"One thousand Canadian girls, he said, had set a splendid example to the men of Canada, by taking the places of fighting men in Italy, and are upholding the splendid reputation already won by the Canadian Women's Army Corps overseas.

"Surely we Colonial-Canadians are not going to sit back and let our women go to Italy and France and other fronts to fight their battles," he asked. "This is a condition which no Canadian who thinks anything of his home or country should tolerate."

Canadians, he went on, are the finest fighting troops in the world. They are the best-clothed, best equipped, best-fed and best paid troops in the world, and at present are spear-heading the attacks on all fronts. Headlines, he stated, every day bring the news of this or that place taken by the Canadians, it is something of which people at home should be proud.

But the boys need help. Canadian men must carry on the traditions of the heroes of Dieppe, and Italy must be maintained. And Canadians of military age at home should express their pride and appreciation of those gallant men by going to their aid.

Young men are urgently needed, he concluded, and needed immediately. "Join now and fight with the finest army in the world for the finest country in the world—Canada."

men who had fought with the British 8th army and Frenchmen who had first sided with Vichy and then swung to the Allied cause.

From the time the Prince David and her sister ships came to a stop 13 miles offshore, this was a strange expedition.

Everything was dominated by what could happen. A naval captain had warned it was bound to be tough and an admiral confessed fears that the Germans knew both when and where the landing would take place. We passed within three miles of Levanzo Island, assaulted by a task force later. With the exception of American torpedo boats there was no immediate protection.

It was a starlit, moonless night, and the little landing craft laboured almost noiselessly for 3½ hours through gentle seas.

To the west of our beach the Germans kept dropping flares both before and after our landing. As the first Commandos went ashore on Cap Negre ahead of the main body there was a scattering of small arms fire but that was all.

In the distance over the horizon a faint glow reflected the bombing of Marseilles, 47 miles to the west.

Until we were within two miles of shore we were guided by American torpedo boats. Then they hastened and Lieut. George Buckingham, of Montreal, the Prince David's flotilla officer, took over.

The entire journey had seemed long but nothing like the last half hour. We waited for a signal from a reconnaissance officer who had gone in a kayak but it seemed an eternity in coming.

At last the craft crept ahead in single file and ghosted in so slowly it was a surprise when Lt. R. Woof, Hamilton, Ont., lowered the ramp and Frenchmen started to hope ashore.

Five men who had been towed behind in a rubber boat cut themselves adrift and paddled ashore.

As we backed away flares continued to our west. There was an occasional burst of machine gun fire around Cap Negre but still no telling serious happened.

On our way back to the ship we heard a gun duel in progress and then saw something burning. It was a German corvette that exploded in flames as we were pulling aboard the Prince David.

Our landing craft, "Dirty Min II", had a crew which included Lt. R. J. Wright, Sarnia, Ont., while officers in the flotilla included Lt. Don Graham, Ken Crowhurst, of Chapleau, Ont.

Seamen stewawins in command of landing crews included L8. Gaston Lavergne, Ottawa; L8. Murray Walker, London, Ont.; and AB. James Cole, Hamilton.

The Prince David, commanded by Cmdr. T. D. Kelly, Victoria, and Toronto, combined with a sister ship to make Canada's naval contribution to this new landing.

The War Today—
Occupation of Germany, Japan Vital to Assurance of Peace

By DEWITT MacKENZIE

President Roosevelt's declaration that Germany and Japan will be occupied by Allied military, even though their surrender unconditionally before their borders are crossed by victorious armies, will ease a lot of anxious minds which have feared that the gangsters might by some skullduggery squirm out of their just and necessary deserts.

Military occupation of enemy countries isn't a matter of revenge. It's vital to ensure peace. There's no doubt that Allied failure to occupy Germany in the last war was partly responsible for the present outburst of aggression, and Japan also probably was encouraged by the "softness" of the Allies. Both these arch brigands got further encouragement by the failure of the exponents of peace to halt such depredations as the rapes of Manchuria, Ethiopia and Austria. The Axis powers logged the Allies as sissies.

It's interesting that Mr. Roosevelt's announcement should come just as the Dumbarton Oaks parley has set off a new blast of propaganda for a peace based on a "genuine compromise of interests" among victors and vanquished. The Nazis assert this is essential to prevent a third World War.

In short, the Boche is threatening us with another conflict if we don't make a compromise peace. That provides further ground, it strikes me, for a thorough housecleaning by the Allies. Appeasement has been tried on both Germany and Japan and the only result has been to increase their arrogant aggression. The consensus of the Allied peoples seems to be that the time has arrived when suspended sentences must give way to stern discipline.

This Warm Summer

The summer of 1944 will be remembered as one of the hottest if not the hottest on record. At least so far it is evidently running ahead of all previous summer seasons for warmth. Of course the season is not closed by any means, August is only half gone and September is yet to come. Just as last winter was in large part quite mild as compared with other recent winters so this summer is seemingly establishing a record of its own.

So far according to Montreal records, kept at McGill Observatory, this summer is shown at that place to have beaten the average record in recent years. A seventy-year period. May mean average temperature this year was 62.1 degrees against the 70-year period mean average of 55.2. For June last record mean average was 69.4 as against this June's figure of 65.8, July mean average this year was 71.1 as compared with 69.4 degrees for the seventy-year period mean record.

McGill records show other facts about the weather and atmospheric conditions. Sunshine figures in totals are May 224.8 hours, June 202.2, July 236.3 hours. The percentage of sunshine in May was 53.2, against the 70-year average of 49.0, June this year 47.4 against the period average of 52.7 and July was 55.0 against the 70-year period average of 57.0. Lack of rainfall has been marked throughout August.

People at any rate will have the pleasure of boasting that this was the hottest or almost the hottest summer of record, exact statistics on this point not being determined until the end of summer which has considerable way to go yet.

At least everyone can honestly say that it has been a real old fashioned summers. The warm spells have been extended and while they have not reached the high temperatures that were reached in a July in the thirties they have been more prolonged than these heat waves were.

Fortunately though there has been felt the parching result of the warm weather, the crops were well on their way before the warm spells began and so have not shown any very severe effect of the warm weather though with so little rain.

What is a Division?

Every day the word "division" is mentioned in the war news and yet there is a hazy view as to what constitutes a division in the various armies. Writing in "Khaki," the Canadian Army Weekly, answers the question "What is a division?" It says "The term 'division' does not always mean a definite number of men." It has changed considerably as in the case of the biggest army divisions, the Russians.

"A German division at full strength normally comprises 8,000 men. Comparable German divisions surrounded may be further deceptive because, in action, not all these divisions will be at full strength. Many will be casualties. Replacements may be along or arriving. Men are on furlough or on course or have been detached for other operations. Thus the 'ten German divisions' may actually total fewer than 50,000 men.

"Australian, Canadian and British divisional organization is approximately the same. In some cases ancillary troops may swell the total of the various divisions, in others there may be a few hundred men less, depending on the branches of the service to which they belong and the form of war establishment decided upon as most efficient."

A Russian division is from 15,000 to 20,000 men; American Tripartite division 12,000 men; similar to British formation, German division 8,000 men with more divisions of smaller size; an armored division of 3,000 to 5,000 and U. S. Marine Corps Division 11,000 men for beachhead fighting.

One normal British division consists of 12,000 men or three brigades of 4,000 men each. Each brigade consists of 3 battalions of 1,000 men each, one battalion consists of five companies of two hundred men each. One company equals three platoons (60 men), one platoon equals three sections (20 men) and one section equals three squads (six men).

It is to be noted that while there are three thousand men shown in three infantry battalions, the brigade totals 4,000 when included in divisional formation. This is due to ancillary troops, medical corps, engineers, signals and so forth.

While the Canadian set-up varies somewhat from the British formation, there is not enough difference to be noticeable or to affect the interchange of a division for either a British or American unit of the same type.

Prophetic Description

Mr. Churchill many months ago referred prophetically to the "soft underbelly of Europe." The world today knows what he meant. In Sicily and in Italy Hitler has shown that his strength is not enough to hold these lands, fight as desperately as the Germans could. Now another pare of the "soft under-belly" of the Continent has been attacked by invaders and little opposition was encountered.

The progress of Allied arms has proven the words of Mr. Churchill as prophetically and exactly true.

Mr. Churchill has been a great statesman and leader and his words have been a powerful agent for Allied victory. Men in every clime who love freedom now and long into the hereafter among the unborn generations will treasure the speeches of the British chief who expressed the courage and wisdom of statescraft of Britain in a day of trial. His apt speeches have been words that have been militant in their power to inform and arouse to deeds of heroism.

GBS Presents Gift

Acceptance with thanks has been sent to George Bernard Shaw for property in Carlow, Eire, offered the city council. The action was taken on receipt of a letter from the famed author in which he said that although he had spent only one day of his 88 years in Carlow, he felt the Eire city should be entitled to first chance for the property. He specified that the land, which yields $600 yearly in rent, should go to the Vocational Office of Ireland if Carlow refused the present. Shaw said that the present rental, when sent to him in England, "is confiscated by the British Government to defray the expense of military operations."

Coal Savings Surprise

Compliance with a Government directive to industry has enabled England to save a startling amount of coal, London reports. The order that electric consumption must be reduced 10 per cent and gas 23 per cent has saved thousand of tons, it is estimated. Individual efforts of the citizens themselves are credited with providing the key to the amazing economy. In addition, disappearance of the blackout wherever possible has had far-reaching effect. Robert Jay Gooden, electrical engineer, said the blackout is Britain's "most hated thing" but replacement of the permanent blackout with a temporary blackout if desired. Most of the economy has come from the man who carefully turns out the light over his own machine whenever it is not in use, Lee reported.

Sleep Cures War Shock

Use of a "mental splint" is turning war-shock casualties into cured men in the York Clinic of Guy's Hospital of London. This unique cure for service men whose nerves have been shattered by the frightful conditions of modern warfare requires only a few weeks' time for many corrections, it is reported. One of the "mental splint" cures is to put patients to sleep for several days. This acts like a splint by lessening anguish and distress while it is in its most acute stage. The clinic is described as more like the cabin accommodations of a luxury liner than a hospital. Some women victims of strain from wartime responsibilities also are being readjusted.

EQUALITY

All's the same when life is ended;
Common's equal to the splendid,
Still and silent, judgment waiting
By a universal test.
Not: "Were you the swiftest runner?
Shrewdest merchant, surest gunner?"
But: "With what you had of talents,
Did you try to do your best?"

When the strife called living closes
And in death the flesh reposes,
Men escape from all distinctions—
Wise or foolish; high or low.
Done with seeking fortune's dollar.
Equal Bullard and scholar.
"Did you work when work was needed?"
All must answere: Yes or no.

When the richest and the strongest,
And the king whose reign was longest,
With the millions of the humble
Meet where everything is clear,
They'll be equal, each and all,
Talent large and talent small,
And be tested by a standard
Fairer much than any here.

Pyle in Normandy:
Bank of Earth Saves Pyle When Shell Explodes Twenty Feet Away

By ERNIE PYLE

On the Western Front, (By Wireless). — The afternoon was tense, and full of action and dirty little might-have-beens.

I was wandering up a dirt lane where infantrymen were squatting alongside in a ditch, waiting their turn to advance. They do it ways aquat like that when they're close to the front.

Suddenly German shells started banging around us. I jumped into a ditch between a couple of soldiers and squatted. Shells were clipping the hedgerow right over our heads and crashing into the next pasture. They suddenly one exploded, not with a crash, but with a ring as though you'd struck a high-toned bell. The debris of burned wadding and dirt came showering down over us. My head rang, and my right ear couldn't hear anything.

The shell had struck behind us, 20 feet away. We had been saved by the earthen bank of the hedgerow. It was the next day before For when we got within 50 yards of the house it got a direct shell hit which killed one officer and wounded several men.

The Germans now talked shells around our front lines. You could not walk ten feet without hitting the ground. They sound like flying heads an quickly you didn't take time to fall forward—I found the quickest way down was to flop flat and sideways.

In a little while the seat of my pants was plastered thick with wet mud clay, and my hands were scratched from hitting rocks and briars in the breat dive.

Nobody ever fastens the chin strap on his helmet in the front lines, for the blast from nearby bursts have been known to catch helmets and break people's necks. Consequently, when you squat quickly you descend faster than your helmet and you leave it in mid-air above you. Then as you land for a second it follows you down and hits you on the head, and settles sideways over your ear and down over your eyes. It makes you feel silly.

Once more shells drove me into a roadside ditch. I squatted there, just a bewildered guy in brown, part of a little line of other bewildered guys as far up and down the ditch as I could see.

It was really frightening. Our own shells fell screamingly short overhead and hitting just beyond. The German shells were bursting in the orchards around us. There was machine-gunning all around, and bullets stung through the hedgerow above us.

I could tell by their shoulder patches that the soldiers near me were from a Texas division, and I wondered what they were doing there. Then I heard one of them say:

"This is a fine foul-up for you! I knew that Eisenhower was from Texas. Hell, we're service troops, and we've got rights in the front lines."

Grim as the moment was, I had to laugh to myself at their pitiful humor.

I left a command post in a farmhouse and started to another about ten minutes away. But before I got there, they said the one I had just left had been hit while I was on the way.

A solid armor-piercing shell had struck it squarely on the roof, and man I knew had his leg cut off. The commanding officer was sitting on the big steel slug over to the hospital in a jeep, and I could see he was in pain.

When I got to another battalion command post, later in the day, they were just ready to move. A kitchen had been set up, and about half a mile in a jeep and picked out a beautiful spot. I got there the cleanest, nicest one he had been in for months. A fire was being built, a pile of wood was piled into several jeeps and drove up there. It had been a beautiful day, and now in the sergeant had left. But when we got to the spot, they were all gone there.

A shell had hit it in the last 20 minutes and set it afire, and it had burned to the ground. So we had to eat our K rations C and farther and picked out another one. We had just finished eating, half an hour when a shell struck in an ammunition dump 200 yards away.

In a few minutes our litter bearers came past carrying a casualty. And then the surgeon of our adjoining battalion, and he had been knocked out by concussion. A likely place to move his first-aid station. A shell had hit right behind him.

That's the way war is on an afternoon that is tense and full of might-have-beens for some of us, and awful realities for others.

It just depends on what your number is. It is all a matter of high number business at all, but in war you sort of let your fellid hover around it, for it's about all you have left.

No British Comment On Motion Introduced In American Senate

London, Aug. 17—(AP)—London newspapers generally printed brief, prominently-displayed stories today on a resolution introduced in the United States Senate yesterday recommending that the United States possession of Bermuda and West Indies islands.

The Daily Mail captioned its front-page paragraph, "Modest demand," and the Daily Telegraph its three-paragraph story on the back page under the headline "Bermuda request, and islands." There was no editorial discussion or official comment.

The resolution was introduced by Senator Kenneth McKellar (Dem., Tenn.) and was referred to the foreign relations committee. The measure also would urge the United States to seek permanent post-war possession of islands in the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Atlantic for its "peace and security."

A minute later a soldier crouching a few lines, a couple of feet away, turned to me and asked, "Are you a war correspondent?"

I said I was, and he said, "I want to shake your hand". And he reached around the bush and we shook hands.

That's all either of us said. It didn't occur to me until later that it was a sort of unusual experience. And I was so addled by the close explosions that I forgot to put down his name.

A few minutes later a friend of mine, Lieut. Col. Ona Bates of Decatur, Miss., came past and said he was hunting our new battalion command post. It was supposed to be in a farmhouse about a hundred yards from us, so I got up and went with him.

We couldn't find it at first. We got about five minutes of walking around in orchards looking for it. Then we saw a big tree mistakenly

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Hoping We Beat the Stork

As a father-to-be to arrive in a few days I should like to have a copy of the Brady Baby Book I have seen mentioned in your column. (J.P.D.)

Answer—I am glad to send the Brady Baby Book and Preparing for Maternity with my best wishes to you and mine or other wives, provided they send stamped envelope bearing their address to which I am to mail the booklets. Others who want the booklets should enclose ten cents for each booklet, and self addressed stamped envelope.

Correspondence At Sea

For our ten years I have suffered from weak nerves. (G.M.S.)

Answer—Write frequently at sea as to what "weak nerves", nervous breakdown, nervous exhaustion" and similar vague terms mean.

Athlete's Foot

If you have anything about athlete's foot please let me know.... I have had it for years. (A.M.)

Answer—Search me, or rather search the red book "What to Eat and Why"——price 25 cents and stamped envelope bearing your address.

Mineral Oil

I use mayonnaise and salad dressing made with mineral oil. Does it not mean that mineral oil coats the walls of the intestines and prevents absorption of vitamins, minerals and other nutritional elements? What is when it is taken in the quantities usually taken as a laxative? Internal bathtub? I no doubt whether the quantity you use in mayonnaise or salad dressing has this effect.

OPEN DOOR POLICY

In diplomacy and international politics the maintenance of equal trading and industrial rights for the nationals of all countries in a given country or territory is called the open door policy.

The term was used in reference to China as early as 1856.

As a foreign policy it was first adopted by the United States.

Toward the end of the 19th century some of the long-term leases granted by China to Germany, France and Great Britain on important ports aroused fears about to become permanent possessions.

The United States feared these leases might result in the dismemberment of China and in the exclusion from Chinese trade of powers not having such possessions. Fearing

In 1899 John Hay, McKinley's secretary of state, sent notes to the interested powers proposing that equal trading rights with all parts of China should be given to all nations on equal terms. Great Britain at once entered a favorable reply at that time.

After the Boxer uprisings, however, Secretary Hay succeeded in getting the chief powers to pledge themselves by definite promises to adhere to the open door policy in China.

The powers did not make treaties to this effect, but merely declared themselves in favor of the policy.

After the Russo-Japanese war Japan was agreed to adhere to the open door policy in China.

BUTTERMILK A ND SKIM MILK

A quart of buttermilk or a quart of skim milk has just one-half the nutritive value (measured in calories of energy) of a quart of fresh whole milk.

When milk (or cream) sours naturally it does so because the lactic-acid bacilli naturally present in milk ferment the lactose (milk sugar) naturally present in milk, producing therefrom lactic acid.

Naturally sour milk is the same as buttermilk in that respect, except that most of the cream (butter fat) has been removed from the milk product known as buttermilk. Skim milk is the milk product that remains after the cream has been removed. Skim milk is highly nutritious even though about half the calories in pure whole milk are in the cream, the butter fat. Skim milk like buttermilk, is still a valuable source of protein and sugar, calcium, phosphorus, vitamin G (riboflavin). It is as available and sound to throw away refined white flour or white bread or feed it to chickens as it is to throw away skim milk or feed it to the pigs.

The milk product left after the fat has been removed from the fresh milk by separator process is identical as the milk product left when fresh milk has been allowed to stand until cream rises and the cream is skimmed off. But the so-called "buttermilk" which is manufactured by a process of working a few particles of some lactic acid bacilli into skim milk or separator milk and perhaps doctoring it a bit with culture of some yeast is not likely to give it more or less the flavor of real buttermilk, which is naturally sour, in my opinion, a fair substitute for natural buttermilk.

Natural buttermilk is a wholesome, nutritious, healthful beverage for children and adults. It is one of every purpose that Acidophilus milk, or any other kind of sour milk is good for and even more so.

When fat is removed from milk, vigorous growth of harmful and healthful growth of lactic acid bacilli and in preventing putrefactive and disease-producing bacteria from multiplying in the intestines from fresh sweet milk is lost. It must be remembered that fresh sweet milk always contains a myriad of vigorous lactic acid bacilli.

As a source of calcium, phosphorus, vitamin B. (thiamin) and vita-min-B2 (G, riboflavin) skim milk, separator milk or buttermilk naturally is equal to fresh whole milk—and it is well to remember that most people are better nourished prolonged or lifelong deficiencies of these nutritional essentials.

Frigate Hallowell Is Commissioned At Montreal Yard

Picton, Aug. 16—Air Vice Marshal W. A. (Billy) Bishop, Director of Recruiting for the R.C.A.F., and hero of World War I., has been invited to officially open Picton Fair on September 11.

Ab. Vernon Wheeler is a member of the crew of HMCS Saskatchewan which helped sink three German trawlers off the coast of Brest, recently. In a letter home he briefly mentioned the action being "in bok one, and one of the crew members was killed. He escaped injury. He enlisted in the RCNVR at Kingston in 1942 and has been overseas nearly a year. He is the son of Mrs. Rupert Wheeler, Picton, and brother of Mrs. Pat Hodgson, Kingston.

HMCS Hallowell, frigate named in honor of this district was commissioned at the Vickers' yards at Montreal yesterday. Among those who attended were County Warden Earl Cruickshank, mayor and Mrs. G. N. McKibbon, Councillor C. H. McGibbon, Reeve R. B. McQuaid of Hallowell, L. B. Calnan, chairman of the Hallowell Committee, and Mrs. Calnan, County Clerk C. O. Rutter. About $1,000 has been raised to provide comforts for the crew.

Canning Tomatoes

Canning of tomatoes gets under way in Prince Edward County this week. Despite the fact that this is a record acreage, factories expect to be able to handle the output which has been considerably decreased due to the prolonged hot and dry weather. This has resulted in a good deal of black rot among early fruit and some blistering. Labor is being secured from Worth Hastings county.

Returning Home

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Martin have received a message from their son Pilot Officer Jack Martin indicating that he will arrive home shortly. He has been serving in Ceylon for two years after service in England and was recently posted to the Flying command. While in England, he was mentioned in despatches, having brought back a riddled aeroplane after the fall of Instruments, which had been shattered.

Dr. Gerald Allison addressed the Rotary Club yesterday, telling of experiences in India. Plans were made to entertain the Napanee Club next Tuesday.

Recover Tires

Culminating a long search, police this week recovered seven tires and tubes, which had been hidden in two wells and a tomato field. This led to the arrest on a charge of theft of Norman Courneyea of Bloomfield. He will appear in Magistrate's Court August 30. Constable George Pitt received a tip, which led to a search being made by Chief of Police and County Constable at the home of Courneyea. It is also alleged, that two tires on accused's car were stolen property as was a radio, also in the car.

Theft of tires and rims have been reported frequently for some months. Those reporting such thefts included George Sheriff, Ben Payne, Robert Thompson, Arthur Tripp, while loss of a radio from his car was reported by Phillip Conley. Of the nine tires in this group, seven were recovered and police made an unsuccessful attempt to recover two which had allegedly been sold in Toronto.

Receives Military Medal

Sgt. Arthur Reed, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Reed was among those receiving the Military Medal for gallantry in Normandy. He is a member of the Cameron Highlanders of Ottawa, and enlisted in that city in September 1939. He went to Iceland in June 1940 and overseas after service there. He was born in Middlesex, England, and came to Canada in 1934. His wife and baby reside in England.

While no citation accompanied the award, it is believed to have been for his feat in capturing 6 Germans on D-Day. In a recent letter to his parents, he related that he and three other members of the unit came across a group of Nazis who were driving eight frightened Canadians. "We went to town on them and soon the half tracks were on fire and we captured 25 Germans. Fortunately, none of our men were injured', he related.

Prime Minister Outlines Benefits For Armed Forces

Ottawa, Aug. 17 (CP) — Prime Minister Mackenzie King said last night in a broadcast address that Canada was moving in the vanguard of nations which have the resources and the will to put the welfare of the people first in the transition from war to peace.

Speaking over the National network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in a free-time, political-broadcast period, Mr. King outlined benefits and other arrangements for members of Canada's armed forces and said their re-establishment to civilian life would depend on a prosperous and happy Canada.

"The government, he said, has taken steps to help ensure full employment and a high level of income after the war.

"We are proceeding with Social Insurance against the major economic hazards," he went on. "We are actively pressing for action to promote world trade and to maintain and expand Canada's markets at home and abroad. We are planning for the rapid and efficient conversion of war industries to meet peacetime needs."

In addition, legislation to promote housing, slum clearance and community planning had been enacted. Banking services had been extended and additional credit facilities provided for industrial expansion, farm improvement and the building and modernizing of houses.

Social Insurance.

Farmers and fishermen had been given Social Insurance through establishment of floors under their prices. Family allowances—"the greatest measure of all"—had provided for the well-being of the nation's children.

Canada's fighting men, said Mr. King, had been given the best in training, leadership and equipment, and nothing had been left undone to ensure victory. He added:—

"It now remains for us to make for the post-war future, the same thorough comprehensive provision that Canada has made for the successful prosecution of the war. Only in this way can we fully provide for the future of our fighting men."

Mr. King said that ultimate victory was "everywhere certain", though none could be sure just when the hour would strike.

"Whether the hour will come sooner or later depends upon the continued exertions of all the United Nations," he added. "We must keep up the drive. The greater our efforts, the sooner victory will be achieved, and the smaller the cost in precious human lives."

FRACTURES ARM IN 2-STOREY FALL

Toronto, Aug. 17 (CP) — Billy Bondarek, seven, fell down an elevator shaft from the seventh floor to a downtown Toronto building overtaking the elevator at the fifth floor and escaped with a fractured arm and minor head injuries. His condition was reported by hospital officials last night as "good."

1904 40TH ANNIVERSARY YEAR 1944

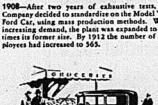
In 1904 when a little group of Canadian business men decided to found a company for the manufacture of automobiles, they little dreamed what an historic step they were taking. They were convinced that the motor car would one day be an important means of transportation, though most people at that time looked upon it as a rich man's plaything. It is doubtful if they foresaw that in forty years their little plant would grow into an industry employing thousands of men, supplying cars to millions of men and women through hundreds of Ford dealers. Little did they dream that in a future war of nations, Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited would become the Empire's largest single source of military transport.

1904—Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited commenced operations in a small building formerly used as a wagon factory. Seventeen men were employed, and the cars at first were assembled from parts imported from Detroit. In the first year of operation, 117 Ford cars were produced.

1908—After two years of exhaustive tests, the Company decided to standardize on the Model "T" Ford Car, using mass production methods. With increased facilities, plant was expanded to ten times its former size. By 1912 the number of employees had increased to 565.



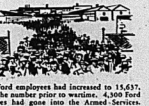
1913—Ford of Canada first started building its own engines thereby creating a new major outlet for Canadian raw materials. Since its introduction two years earlier, the Model "T" engine had already become famous for its simplicity of design and absolute dependability under all conditions.

1915—By this time there was a chain of more than 350 Ford dealers and nine Ford Branches across Canada. The Company always believed it owed a debt to the public—that of providing expert service and genuine replacement parts for Ford cars as long as those cars were in operation.

1916—Plant expansion continued as demand increased. The War, 1914-1918, called for added output. In 1916-1917, production reached a new high of 30,000 units as a new branch assembly plan went into operation at Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, London and Saint John.

1937—After completely re-cooling the entire plant, Ford of Canada came out with the new Model "A". The car's modern design, power, speed and low cost operation won for it immediate acceptance. Buyers made their selection from several different models with color and upholstery options.

1938—Saw the introduction of the Ford V-8 engine. For the first time, a powerful, smooth, V-type eight-cylinder engine was made available to Canadian motorists in the popular price field. Its economy, simplicity and outstanding performance made it the talk of the automobile world.



1939—70% of all automobiles exported from Canada were built by Ford, more than half of the entire Ford output going abroad. The huge export business, started with the founding of the company was built up in every part of the British Empire with the exception of the British Isles.

1940—Ford of Canada was already producing a large volume of war equipment and heavy shipments were made to many different battlefronts. As early as 1936 the groundwork for the production of military vehicles had been laid in closest co-operation with the Department of National Defence.

1942—The last passenger car for the duration came off the assembly line, climaxing a series of manufacturing curtailments of the previous 12 months. Now, until Victory was won, the Company's huge production was to be still multiplied but strictly confined to war equipment and essential vehicles.

1943—Ford employees had increased to 15,637, double the number prior to wartime. 4,300 Ford employees had gone into the Armed Services. 15,000 blood transfusions had been given at the Ford Clinic. Employees had invested $10,000,000 in Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates.

1944—Midnight, August 17, the Company's 40th anniversary—and out of its mighty war plant comes a Universal Carrier, the 27,678th of its kind, the 138,978th Military vehicle for World War II, the 1,893,162nd unit produced by Ford of Canada, during its forty year history in this Great Dominion.

WEDDINGS

KEITCH—MALLOY

A quiet, but charming wedding with only immediate relatives attending, was solemnized in the church of St. Philomena at Ormsby, Ont., on Saturday, Aug. 12, at 11 a.m., when Clara Marie, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Malloy, became the bride of Harry Elwood, eldest son of Mrs. Luella Keitch, Belleville, and the late David Oscar Keitch. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. R. Rowell, of Kingston, before an altar decorated with gladioli and bouvardia.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was wearing brocaded white satin, with sweetheart neckline, and long sleeves with points over the wrists, fingers cap net, all studded with rhinestones in Mary Queen of Scot design and a strand of pearls about her neck. She carried sweetheart roses.

Miss Frances Malloy, sister of the bride, was her only attendant. She was dressed in pink net over taffeta and carried a Colonial nosegay of pink roses, white and mauve asters.

Bernard Malloy, brother of the bride, supported the groom. Rev. F. A. Dostal, of Batawa, played the Wedding March from Lohengrin and sang "On This Day, Oh, Beautiful Mother."

A reception was held at the home of the bride. The bride's mother received in a two-piece crepe of brown crepe, with brown accessories and corsage of American Beauty roses. The groom's mother was in melon crepe with white accessories and corsage of Sunset roses.

For going away, the bride wore a two-piece mauve crepe dress with white accessories. The happy couple left amid showers of confetti and good wishes for points west.

On their return they will take up residence at 47 Ridley Street, Belleville.

MILLER—BOYCE

Attractively decorated with ferns and standards of white and pearl gladioli, Deseronto United Church was the scene of a pretty wedding on the afternoon of August twelfth, when Lucy Margaret Ruth Boyce, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Boyce, Deseronto, was united in marriage to Frederick Archibald Miller, London, Ont., son of Mrs. J. George Miller, London, Ont., and the late Reverend Doctor J. George Miller.

The Reverend James Miller, Toronto, uncle of the groom, officiated, assisted by the Reverend H. A. Bunt, Deseronto, and the wedding music was played by Professor W. I. R. Epps, Napanee, and Miss Fern Robinson, soloist, singing "The Day of Golden Dreams."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in floor length blush pink satin, with padded petal hem, high lace yoke, and long points falling over the wrists; with matching veil held by a coronet in a halo headdress bordered with seed pearls. She wore a cameo pendant, the gift of the groom. She carried a shower bouquet of Talisman roses.

The matron of honor was Mrs. John Berry of Pembroke, who wore a gown of long peace crepe, square neckline and long organza balloon sleeves; while the bridesmaids, Miss Mary Tufford, of Bensmville, and Miss Dorothy Coon, of Kingston, wore powder blue crepe, same style. Junior bridesmaid, Miss Marilyn Boyce, sister of the bride, was dressed in pale peach crepe. All wore matching colors, and carried bouquets of Johanna roses and tea roses.

Sergeant Jack Mayhury, R.C.A.F., of Jarvis, was best man, and Mr. Jack Love of Hamilton, and Mr. John Berry, R.C.E., of Petawawa, served as ushers.

The reception was held at the home of the bride where the bride's mother received in queen's blue sheer street length dress, matching flower hat, and corsage of red roses, assisted by Mrs. Harold Miller, of Toronto, sister-in-law of the groom.

Those serving at the reception were—Miss Louise Cameron, St. Catharines; Miss Doris Callaghan, Lonsdale; Miss Shirley Boyce, Napanee; Miss Marguerite Bibbins, Belleville; Miss Norma Boyce, Kingston; Miss Hilda Hinkley, Deseronto. Miss Laura Cranston, Kingston; Miss Ella Jan MacGregor, St. Catharines; and Mrs. Lanfear McCullough, Deseronto.

Miss Fern Robinson sang during the reception, "I'll Walk Beside You", and the Reverend Frederick George Robinson proposed a toast to the bride. For the wedding trip to points west, and Kawartha Lakes, the bride travelled in a two-piece turquoise wool crepe dress, with pearl grey accessories.

Among the out-of-town guests was Mrs. M. James, of Belleville.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Some Wives Would Give Anything For Such Blessings—This One Complains

"Dear Miss Fairfax"

"My husband and I are very happy, as we are each other. He's kind, can always be depended on for everything, stays home with me, and never goes anywhere without me. I'm six years older.

"I've always worked, and feel such a burden to him now that I've given up my job, that I feel I just must continue to support myself, as it gives me such an inferiority complex. It's difficult for me to take money from my husband to buy clothes, etc.

I never go to the beauty shop because I feel I'm spending money that belongs to someone else.

"It isn't that he begrudges it, for he knows I've been used to having my own money, and also to each account. He tells me my hair-do is too young for me, but wants me to wear high heels and clothes with lots of ruffles, but that's not my style.

"My husband is an only child, and has never been around youngsters, so he is an old man-boy. I was always a tom-boy. My husband wants me to be grown-up and act my age. Do you think I should start using makeup and perfume, etc.?

And I don't like long red fingernails. Should I try to change my looks and change my life to please the man I love?

"My husband is the kind of a man who wants to protect a woman. He thinks I should scream and run to him when I see a snake, while I'd rather pick up a stick and kill it, if it's a poisonous one.

"B".

Many a woman would ask no greater happiness than to have places with you. Your husband wants a little, only to love him and take care of you. "Take the goods the gods provide thee" as Dryden says, and learn to enjoy your blessings gracefully.

It's sheer morbidity to imagine you're a burden to such a man. Today marriage offers fewer and fewer opportunities for a woman to be supported by her husband. The man of brawn seems to be a sort of "museum piece".

And please get over your horrors of going to a beauty parlor. Nothing like them for making the best of a woman's appearance.

While you're there, try out several styles of hair arrangements to see the one your husband likes. And if he likes long curly clothes, buy some. The question of makeup and long red finger nails is left entirely to your own discretion.

Many a good wife who's really a good sport, at heart, has played the clinging vine to please her husband. Changes have a way of shrinking at the sight of a mouse or a snake.

"B".

Ford-Canada Forty Years Old Today

FORTY YEARS AGO TODAY—August 17, 1906 —Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, started business in this little Walkerville, Ontario, factory with a small drill press and a freight hoist as equipment. Seventeen men on the payroll turned out 117 Ford passenger cars in the first year, assembling parts imported from Detroit. From this modest factory has developed the vast Ford plant of today with 15,000 workers, the biggest producer of military vehicles in the British Empire.

1,893,162 Ford automobiles since 1906 is the production record of Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, Walkerville, Ontario, for the sixty forty years ago today—August 17, 1966. Included in that total are 318,976 military vehicles—one of every six vehicles of that type made in Canada during the war years. Among the 1,574,186 cars made by Ford in the same time is that coming-off the assembly line on Ford's 40th birthday, the company had turned out 27,658 carriers for the United Nations. Ford is the only maker of the carrier in Canada.

Ford Motor Co. of Canada Observes 40th Anniversary; Has Produced 1,893,162 Units

Windsor, Aug. 17—Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited is forty years old today. The anniversary passed without ceremony as the 15,0000 workers at the huge last here, finished the day with the Company's war production at 318,976 military vehicles, representing more than 50 per cent of all mechanical transport for the United Nations made in Canada since war began.

The historical milestone occurred with the Ford plant concentrated on all war work, for no passenger cars have been built since April, 1942.

Production totals today showed that the company, in making 318,976 military vehicles, has turned out fifty different types of transport for the fighting fronts, ranging from field artillery tractors to self-propelled anti-aircraft gun trucks. Included in war production has been almost continuous output of the universal carrier, the all-purpose fighting machine which Ford alone makes in Canada, Carrier No. 27,658 capped the day's production.

Started in Wagon Factory

Including the military vehicles, it was announced, the company has manufactured 1,893,162 Fords since it went into business in Canada forty years ago. The start came in a wagon factory with production limited on the payroll. In the first year they turned out 117 Fords by assembling parts imported from the United States. Passenger cars in those days were really little bright red cars with open tonneaus.

The number one man job in the vast plant, according to those on hand, has been mass production of the universal carrier. Number one technical advance of war days has been adaption of steel casting in spinning moulds to uses never before attempted, thus producing a carrier at one time smashed a critical floor bleack on airplane cylinder barrels which was grounding many bomber planes in Commonwealth Air Training Plan camps. Ford's research method also has cut production costs by saving materials and speeding output.

4,000 Employees in Service

Ford employees here have achieved a notable war record spent entirely in Canada. Their hand-to-hand production of war material since the war began, 4,000 of them have left the plant to join the army and women in plant and offices have replaced nearly half of them. In 1944 they bought $6,000,000 worth of war saving certificates and $1,000,000 in Victory bonds and together have given over 12,000 blood donations to the Canadian Red Cross Society and its predecessors on the fighting front.

The anniversary celebration here was shared by subsidiaries of Ford of Canada operations in Australia. Ford is making mines, military vehicles, universal carriers and jeeps there, while in South Africa Ford plants are making military trucks. In New Zealand the Ford plant has recently produced its 100,000th motor vehicle, grenades, and bombs trucks as well.

'Toe-Stomper' Hall Waved Out As Maxwell Awards Bout To Sexton After Each Win Fall

Irish Monahan Disposes of Toar Morgan in Six Minutes

DUNLOP EARNS DRAW

Frank Sexton's Pacific Coast wrestling title is still secure, after his claim to having been undefeated in over two years of wrestling campaigning across this continent. However, it wasn't because Dr. Len Hall, claimant to the Ohio Powerhouse's crown, didn't try to dethrone the Columbus grappler before 1,000 fans at the Rume Arena Wednesday night. As a matter of fact Referee Bert Maxwell had, to disqualify the Hollywood villain to terminate the best bout staged here by Promoter Tommy in many a moon.

It developed into one of those science versus brute strength affairs with science nearly playing second fiddle. Challenger (Ice-campaign) Hall applied every means of attack not in the rule book and when the second fall by means of battering Sexton's against the ring posts and leaving him in the born de combat position prostrate on the mat. However, Sexton had won the first fall with an aeroplane spin, that left nothing to the imagination to the speediest action bout of the semester and despite the torrid heat, in taking the second fall the villainous Hall buried Sexton against the ring posts, using him by the feet and literally booted the Ohian into submission, much to the disapproval of the patrons.

Hall Weathered Storm.

In the final round Sexton tried a little roughness on his own account and had Hall temporarily incapacity of the ropes from a terrific attack of elbow smashes. However, Hall weathered the storm and again gained the advantage by hurling Sexton around the ring posts and hanging him head downwards from where the Hollywood villain proceeded to use Sexton's head for a football. Referee Maxwell intervened and for his efforts was given a physical attack at the hands of Hall. Maxwell, however, didn't take any too well to this procedure and their was a mighty shout of approval when the official disqualified Hall and raised Sexton's hand in token of victory. This keeping Sexton's two-year undefeated record unblemished.

Anderson on Mound.

Bill Anderson baited for the Marines allowing but eight hits, including Cliche home runs by Bernard and Whalen, the latter getting two sixties for good measure. Stan Laffman pitched for the Army Aome being touched for nine safeties, three of which came in the fatal eighth inning when Marines rallied to win, 5-4. Monahan had a single, a triple, while LaBonne had a double and a single. Anderson struck out nine in his campaign on the mound and allowed but four passed two.

C.A.H.A. Recommends Deletion of Clause

Toronto, Aug. 17 —(CP)— Officers of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association met here last night and unanimously decided to recommend to the executive that the present "Intermediate" eligibility rules which allows junior branch players to be signed after their junior players at the end of the season be deleted.

If this recommendation is approved by the executive, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association junior champions will not be allowed to add four players from other clubs to their roster as they enter the inter-branch playdowns, leading to the Memorial Cup. President Frank Sargent of Port Arthur explained.

The officers also decided to recommend that the association's injury replacement clause be deleted except with reference to goalkeepers. For several years, C.A.H.A. clubs have been able to obtain replacements for any injured players. However, if the executive approves, goalies can be replaced in future and such injured goalies will have to produce medical certificates to prove they are unable to finish out the season.

Mr. Sargent said he and other association officers will meet Montreal Maroons' officials here tomorrow to discuss rules and N.H.L.-C.A.H.A. relations.

SACO 'MARINES' RALLY TO DEFEAT CEMENTMEN 6-5

At One Time Point Anne Had Three-Run Lead Over Marines

LUSTY CLOUTING

Rallying in the eighth inning with solid base knocks the SACO, "Marines" drew first blood in the Belleville City Men's Softball League finals to eke out a 6 to 5 win over the Point Anne Cementmen before a mere handful of patrons at the Exhibition Park Wednesday night. Softball fans missed a keen nine-ball battle as the tide of diamond battle surged first to one and then the opposite side with the winning runs ultimately being left on the runways.

Whitehead's double and Whalen's single gave the Cementmen the first run of the game, but the Marines came back with two in their half of the fourth, when Wood opened with a triple and got home on Clem's double. The latter scored on an error, 11 looked like Point Anne as the Cementmen scored three in the top half of the fifth inning. Lash opened on an error. Green singled and all scored on Mike Whalen's three-bagger. However, the Marines' sixth inning homer saw Point Anne leading 5 to 2. Then Cliche smashed a home run for the Marines in the bottom half of the sixth, however.

The score remained at 5-3 until the bottom half of the eighth when, with one out, Henri Bernard's single did likewise before LaBonne doubled and the next batsman Harry Wardaugh came through with another double that sent the tying and winning runs across the home plate as the Marines scored three. In the Point LaBonne displaced the left shoulder while sliding safely for a tally. He will be out of the game for the remainder of the series, that continues at Point Anne, Friday.

A'S PUT CRIMP IN WINNING WAYS OF THE BROWNIES

Connie Mack's Squad Stops St. Louis With 4-2 Victory

YANKEES GAIN

By JACK HAND
(Associated Press Sport Writer.)

Mr. baseball from Philadelphia may have the day in the American League pennant race, although Connie Mack's Athletics today were hurled in the bottom half of the standings, he watched the A's put a 4-3 crimp in the Browns last night in the opener of a four-game series. St. Louis boasted only a 9-7 season edge in games with Philadelphia with six to go.

Russ Christopher stopped the Brownies last night for the second time in a row and his fifth straight victory since Ernest Kramer's expensive 8 to 1-3-game lead was lost affected.

Detroit and New York closed in on second-place Boston. The Tigers beat Chicago, 11-6, and the Yanks' 10th homer with two on in the seventh. The blow spoiled the first big league start of rookie Rex Cecil from San Diego who stepped out of a California pace to gain a relief decision over St. Louis last Sunday.

New York moved to within a game of second and 7-1-3 of St. Louis on a dramatic ninth-inning homer by Bud Metheny with two on that downed Cleveland, 11-8. Ed Lopat hurled Chicago to a 7-2 victory over Washington, while Jim Tobin pitching fanned 11 in eight innings for the losers.

In the National, St. Louis set a modern record for reaching win No. 80 on the earliest date by shutting out New York Giants, 5-0.

Pittsburgh took the suspension of second place when rain washed out its game after two innings and Cincinnati fell before Brooklyn's Curt Davis, 3-1, snapping the Dodgers' losing streak at five.

For the fourth straight game the Bisons unleashed a vicious 22-hit attack as they smothered Syracuse, 11-8, last night. Big Eddie Kobesh led the offensive with four hits, one of them his 21st home run.

Meanwhile, Newark Bears lost a chance to climb into a tie for fifth as Jersey City, behind the relief of Joe Page started and had to be relieved by Ed Marlesa, as Jack Burman pushed over the winning runs in the eighth with a single.

Toronto Maple Leafs swept their second consecutive double-header from Jersey City, 11-1 and 5-3. The big night was a two-hitter by Leaf Pitcher Harry Jordan in the opener, with Whitey Lockman singling for the Jersies in the fifth.

The nightcap was featured by an eight-run first inning for the Leafs, Little Lefty Lamanna's 10th with four errors in that frame, as the Leafs struck for seven of their 11 hits. Gardella continued his potent stickwork with a homer for the Giants in the fifth.

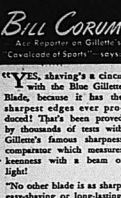
TWENTY PAIRS LEFT IN DOUBLES

Toronto, Aug. 17—(CP)—Twenty pairs were left today to fight it out for the Townsend-Clark trophy, emblematic of the doubles championship of the annual tournament of the Ontario Lawn Bowling Association now being staged here.

The 20 were all that remained of 150 pairs who entered the first round of the event yesterday morning. And among those eliminated was last year's doubles champion-ship pair, C. Page and Gordon Fleming of West Toronto.

Those eliminated in play for the premier doubles trophy entered the Birks-Ellis-Ryrie competition and if defeated in that secondary event they continued to play in two consolation groups.

Play in the Birks-Ellis-Ryrie trophy event passed the second round last night.



Tournament officials are hoping to complete all doubles play today leaving tomorrow, the tournament's final day, for singles.

Also in the competitions remain to be disposed of today for the Ontario trophy and the Toronto trophy—both of which were left not completed Tuesday night when play in the Ontario trophy entered the final round and the Toronto trophy play reached the quarter-final stage.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Aug. 17 —(CP)— Compared with the United States, Canada has been considerably behind the times as far as High School athletics are concerned. Since the war especially, organized inter-school sport programs have become scarcer than ever in Canada, with transportation problems and curtailment of many sport class athletics taking their toll.

Sport is big business in U. S. high schools, with well-equipped gyms and trained physical directors the rule, whereas in Canada things are taken more casually. Except for a few of the larger cities where full-scale programs can be readily organized, High School sport always has been on a haphazard scale. Not that there aren't interesting leagues, and provincial championships accepted for the best, but as full-fledged physical programs are concerned, it's a sad case.

With the emphasis now being laid on national physical fitness and organized athletics, it would seem that high schools would be a good place to start. After all the High School youngsters will provide a good groundwork for that future happy physical state that is being given such prominence.

It's Appalling!

While on the subject of National Physical Fitness, Maj. Lan Ehenhardt, National Director has a word of cheer and a ray of hope for the middle-aged and others not especially inclined to athletics who were afraid they might be handed into violent programs of chinnings and push-ups. The Major doesn't approve of sudden, violent physical purges of that nature. In an address at Montreal he told the story of a fortyish but fit lad of his acquaintance. Asked if he took much exercise to keep in trim, he explained the secret of his success thus: "I get all the exercise I need acting as pall-bearer at the funerals of my friends who take too much exercise."

Incidentally:

There is no little heated discussion around Toronto over the action of the services forming their own football league this fall. When the Canadian Corps dropped out of the Ontario Rugby Football Union's five-team loop, the other clubs didn't take to it too kindly, but they'll carry on just the same. . . . Vancouver baseball fans will have a stake in the new frigate H. M. C. S. Captilano—named after a storied river, chief community in coast history. Proceeds of an exhibition game at Capilano Stadium will be turned over to the ship's comforts fund . . . .

New York, Aug. 17 —(AP)— Soldier ball players in the Salt Lake City territorial league play under their own names, for other than their army teams, for no body has objected to their using "flags" in semi-pro games . . . Tuss McLaughlin, Lamanna (Braves) has become "Werner" on special leave and Carmine Mogavero (Cubs) Iott, San Antonio and Browns, has appeared as "Hooks," "Winner" and "Steward." . . . Horse Sense Bridge

By SAM GORDON
The Ribitzer

Relax, Max. Daily for one more week with opening bids of two in a suit and their responses. Then we will drift into openings of two no-trumps and beyond.

Meantime, start a deal as if you had the south hand in this pair:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠A Q 10	♠7 6 4 3
♥K Q J 7	♥10 9 5
♦A K Q	♦J 7 3
♣A K	♣7 5 4
	♣4 3

That's a brute of a hand. It's a hand like a foot with the gout. If you don't make a game with that hand, you will go through life talking to yourself.

With such a hand, some players know the wrong thing to do and do it; some know the right thing to do and don't; some always do it the right way without knowing why.

How do you show such a powerhouse? The same as you do any hand that can make a game. Simply by starting out with an opening bid of two in a suit. In this case, your opening is two hearts.

There you have two hearts that bid one; two hands with but a single thought. It shows enough to make a game. It orders partner to help keep the bidding alive to game.

When you start with that bid, pass the smelling salts. Because if you have that, partner has nothing. If she doesn't drop, her shoulders will, as the doomed hit her face will.

Her reaction is disappointing. If she has nothing, somebody else must have the big cards. Would she prefer they were with opponents? She should be glad you have them.

North should respond with two no-trump; the signal for showing a hand that has at least three stick tricks. That immediate response confirms your knowledge that north hand has no ace or K Q.

You then bid three hearts, which is not a game. Forced to bid again, partner then bids four hearts. Shall you? Yes, you do. Stick around. We may open up a keg of nails.

"The New Adventures of Tarzan" (First Belleville Showing)

All the thrills of the jungle and its matchless beauty to boot are to be found in "The New Adventures of Tarzan," which starts tonight at the Capitol. Herman Brix, famous athlete, is the star who portrays Edgar Rice Burroughs brawny superman on the screen. Filmed in Guatemala, Central America, it has all of genuine authenticity about it, something which cannot be attained by using artificial sets. For anyone who likes a good hair-raising picture of this it is.

On the same program is a wild Western thriller. "The Vigilantes Ride" which is as full of excitement as any picture can be. Russell Hayden is the hard-riding hero who provides a thrill a minute. Plus the wooly entertainment is here for anyone who wants it. Together the two pictures make one of the best action bills in Belleville.

AT THE BELLE

"Song of Russia," Romantic M-G-M's "Song of Russia" starring Robert Taylor and Susan Peters, now on the Belle Theatre screen is a glorious romance set to stirring music. It is laid in the ground of modern Russia at peace and at war.

Directed by Gregory Ratoff, himself a fabulous Russian, "Song of Russia" is the story of an American symphony conductor who falls in love with a lovely Russian girl while touring Russia prior to the Nazi invasion. War breaks out while they are on their honeymoon, disrupting their peaceful dreams of a happy future. They are caught in the sweep of the initial Nazi success and remain with Russia during her darkest hour before they are convinced that as world-famous musicians their job is to keep culture alive, and they return to America.

Jovial Robert Benchley plays Taylor's American manager who puts up with the romance of his friend in spite of his better judgment. John Hodiak, Felix Bressart, Michael Chekhov, Darryl Hickman and Jacqueline White are featured prominently in the cast as Russian farmers and musicians who fete the gifted American because they love Russia.

Gregory Ratoff directed the fast moving story of love and war with a sympathetic hand and Joseph Pasternak, who has built the all-star productions of "Thousands Cheer" produced for Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer.

Tom and Jerry Cartoon "Million Dollar Cat," is the title of a funny M-G-M Tom & Jerry cartoon to be presented on the same program with "Twenty Years After" a thoroughly entertaining M-G-M novelette.

Electrical Dealers Want Appliances Released for Sale

Release of major electrical appliances other than those already available for domestic consumption was requested in a resolution forwarded to Donald Gordon, Chairman, Wartime Prices and Trade Board, Wednesday by the directors of the Ontario Electrical Appliance Dealers Association following a two-day conference held here.

The resolution included a request for an audience with Mr. Gordon, to discuss possibilities of release of appliances now being manufactured in Canada.

Director felt that because of the United States recent announcement that it has lifted from the prohibitive list, certain major electrical appliances and permitted manufacturers to produce them when possible, for domestic consumption, that Canada should act in a like manner.

It is expected that a conference will be held with the W.P.T.B. in the immediate future, following the decision of the present Ottawa-Washington conference regarding this above matters.

Australian Govt. Asking for Much Additional Power in Saturday Vote

Canberra, Aug. 17—(CP)—(Advance)—The Australian people go to the polls Saturday to decide whether the government of Prime Minister John Curtin should be given additional powers for five years after the war to handle post-war problems.

When war started the commonwealth government passed the National Security Act which gave it wide powers for the conduct of the war which, in peace-time would be within the jurisdiction of state governments. It was similar to a law passed in Canada, the War Measures Act. Both measures terminate when the war ends.

The commonwealth government and most of the state governments, however feel that the wide powers of the central government will be required in the post-war period. A referendum, however, has developed over the extent of the added powers so it was decided to hold a referendum on the question.

Servicemen Voting New

Although the referendum was set for Aug. 19, voting now is taking place among servicemen serving outside Australia. It is expected that more than 2,000 servicemen are entitled to vote. Servicemen in the United States with a vote will send their ballots to Ottawa to be counted. Dr. W. A. Wynes, official secretary at the Australian High Commissioner's office in Ottawa, is returning officer for North America.

Besides fighting personnel, merchant seamen and diplomatic students may vote. Australian diplomats abroad are not permitted to cast ballots.

Australian jurisdiction is divided between the commonwealth and state parliaments in much the same manner as it is divided in Canada between the Dominion and provinces. In some respects, however, the Canadian federal government has a broader jurisdiction than has the Australian central government.

Australia, however, has the power to amend its own constitution whereas in Canada any changes in the British North America Act have to be sought in Britain. Parliament at the request of the Dominion government.

After the six Australian states have been federated, the central government was given some time-limit powers in 39 specific matters which included trade and commerce to civil and criminal law.

Fourteen Points of Power.

The commonwealth government's power is asking for 14 additional powers which will carry over five years after the war ends.

They are:

1. Re-instatement and advancement of war veterans and the advancement of dependents of service personnel who have died or been disabled as a consequence of war.

2. Employment or unemployment.

3. Organized marketing of commodities.

4. Companies laws so that they will be uniform throughout the commonwealth.

5. Trusts, combines and monopolies.

6. Profiteering and prices (but not prices or rates charged by state or semi-governmental or local governing bodies for goods and services.)

7. The production and distribution of goods with certain limitations requiring approval of state governments.

8. The control of overseas exchange and overseas investments.

9. Air transport.

10. International or railway gauges.

11. National works, but the consent of the state must precede the consent of a state government before starting work in any state.

12. National health in co-operation with the states.

13. Family allowances.

14. The people of the aboriginal state.

Fields of Difference.

Division of jurisdiction between the federal government and the provincial governments, in Canada, for instance, does not coincide with the division between the federal and state parliaments in Australia.

There has never been any dispute over agreement in Canada as to the federal government's authority to look after the welfare of war veterans or their dependents. However, in the case of unemployment and employment there is required co-operation with the provinces.

Air transport has been declared by the courts as within the jurisdiction of the Canadian government and the government there has never entered into agreements for carrying out National Works.

VITAL WEAPON

A fleet of 5,000 bombers and escort fighters raiding Germany uses up 5,260,000 gallons of high test aviation gasoline.

BILLION DOLLAR ENTERPRISE

By the end of June, 1944, Canada had produced $2,000,000,000 worth of war vehicles.

London, Aug. 17—(CP)—Members of parliament, at present on a seven-week recess, have the opportunities of having everyone, including themselves, hoping that their period of leave may be curtailed.

But when the House adjourned, against the wishes of some members, it was on the understanding that it would be recovened in a short notice should the end of the war become imminent. Daily Mail post expressed popular sentiment on this score when it wrote:

"Hitler deserts a holiday.

"You've had an awful lot to say
"Concerning Hitler, Duce and Jap
"And yet, we hope they'll spoil your "Jaunt.
"We do not mind you rushing back
"If only it's to cheer."

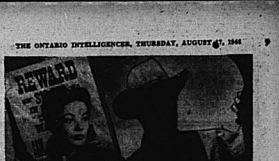
Labor members, many of whom expect another six weeks recess, also won't be caught short if there are sudden developments for the administrative committee of their parliamentary party plans to meet at frequent intervals to keep in touch with events.

It's just a straw in the breeze, but most members feel confident they will be recalled before Sept. 2 when the recess ends.

Home Secretary Morrison has ceased the ban on overseas travel and announced he will consider applications from wives of men overseas, and invalided persons, people returning to their homes within the bounds of Allied control tries; and people who want to visit their homes either in Britain or in Eire.

The King has approved the appointment of Sir Godfrey Martin Huggins, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, as a member of the order of the companions of honor. The order is limited to 65 members.

The Board of Education is a ministry now and its head, R. A. Butler, is its minister and not its president. The change became effective when the Education Act received royal assent early this month.



Lord Derby, who is 79, made a move toward retirement from public life when he announced at a meeting of the community council of Lancashire that he would not propose to preside at any further public meetings.

AT THE BELLE — Susan Peters is co-starred with Robert Taylor in M-G-M's "Song of Russia," a perfectly glorious romance featuring Robert Benchley, now on the Belle Theatre screen.

Punch-Drunk Boxers To Go Says President Boxing Commission

(By The Canadian Press.)

To eliminate punch-drunk or deteriorated boxers from the ring, Dr. Frank J. Greene of the National Boxing Association yesterday proposed at his Washington, D.C., office a system of periodic psychiatric and medical examinations for fighters. He urged that managers be made responsible for reporting a boxer when there are indications of mental or physical trouble. Greene's statement followed the recent case of Len Franklin who was killed in a New Jersey bout following a routine pre-fight examination.

Once a famed backfielder with Montreal football club, Gordie Perry last night was appointed coach of the Oilaws Trojans in the O.R.F.U., announcement being made at the team's first practice for which about 30 players turned out.

London Ball Club breezed through to a 16-4 victory over Waterloo Tigers last night at London in a senior semi-final of the Inter-County League. In the other half of the series at Galt, the Terriers blanked Stratford Nationals 3-0.

Byron Nelson of Toledo and Harold McSpaden of Philadelphia swept to one-sided victories in the first round yesterday of the Pro Golfers Association championship tournament at Spokane, Wash. Nelson measured Mike De Massey, San Jose, Calif., 5 and 4 to finish three under par for the day.

The Village Farm Stakes on the Grand circuit program at Saratoga Springs, N.Y., last night resulted in split honors for Time Table and Biddie Boerna, the latter taking the second heat in a four-horse photo finish. The Colonel's Lady set a season's trotting record of 2:06 1-4 in winning the fourth race.

The 9th annual Canadian Pacing Derby at New Hamburg Oval, yesterday was copped by The Count, owned by: J. W. Brown of New Liskeard and driven by Chapper Chapman. The winner covered his six mark for the mile in 2:06 1-4, three-quarters of a second faster than his previous best at Goderich last week.

With Sal Maglie on the mound, Montreal Islanders of Cleveland-Port Colborne Victorias 3-0 last night at Welland to take a two-game lead in the best of seven semi-finals of the Niagara senior loop.

The Junior Inter County finals were postponed as not enough last night after Galt Terrier Pups came from behind to wallop Rangers 7-3 at Kitchener. The third game is scheduled for Saturday at Galt.

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 14

"In substance yes sir," the girl answered.

"Well, what do you say to that, Dr. Clyde?" Levering demanded.

Bewildered.

"She never confided any of these things to me, Mr. Levering," he said.

"Why Dr. Clyde!" Jeanne exclaimed, wrathily. Levering mentioned her to keep silent.

"There was one thing she did tell me," Clyde continued, slowly, as though he hesitated to tell it. "And what was that?"

"She did tell me that she wasn't really Jeane Hallard. That she was Jeannine Rue. I forget what name she used. Of course, it's possible she was using Jeane Hallard. She has her passport. Her description fits it, her picture is on it."

"And what did you do when she told you this story, Doctor?"

"I scolded her as best I could. I insisted she was suffering from an hallucination. I ascribed it to the terrible experiences she went through in France before she finally made her way to Lisbon.

"To be perfectly frank, sir, I believed and still believe that she is slightly unbalanced mentally. Nothing serious — nothing that can't be corrected with proper care, of course. As a matter of fact, I made a report on her to the F. B. I."

"That is right, Mr. Levering," Norwood said heavily. "I have it with me." He produced a paper from his pocket and gave it to the F. B. I. man. Levering started to read to himself, then changed his mind and read it aloud.

It was a technical report, but easily gave the impression to a layman that Clyde considered the girl unbalanced.

Shocked. Jeanne cried out several times during the reading that it was a lie—it wasn't true. Levering read on, ignoring her outbreaks.

Suggestion.

The report concluded with the suggestion from Clyde that he was making his diagnosis with the greatest reluctance as he knew how it might reflect upon the colleges.

"It is a terrible scandal — all this," Norwood spoke up, gesturing with his hands. "As if to take in the F. B. I. office, Jeanne and Levering. "It will be a sad blow to Hallard when he has labored so hard and so long to keep at a high standard."

"Dr. Norwood," the girl pleaded. "Look at me! Can't you tell that I'm as sane as you are. That there is nothing wrong with me? All this I will tell you on the part of Dr. Clyde to discredit me? I know too much now, about his activities. That's why he's trying to make you believe I'm crazy."

"It is too bad," Dr. Norwood said, shaking his head, sadly, "that the last of the Hallards should be afflicted this way."

"Have you consider the case hopeless, Dr. Clyde?" Levering asked.

"Not at all, sir. I think the young lady may need institutional care. With proper rest and treatment, she may regain her proper senses. She is suffering. I would say, from shock."

"The result of her experiences abroad," Norwood added, for fear it to happen before, people becoming confused about their identity—imagining they are someone else."

Jeanne suddenly thought of the clippings she had received from the Santa Ana paper telling of the death of Victor In Europe. One she had received as she left the boat in New York — the other was delivered to her at Miss Marston's home just after she had arrived.

Those clippings would prove her story was correct. She would unmask this smug Dr. Clyde and expose him for what she knew him to be—a Nazi agent.

But where were they? She hadn't seen them since the day of her arrival in Stockton. She hadn't thought about them since, as a matter of fact. If she should tell about them and could not be able to produce the clippings, it would merely add strength to Clyde's story that she was unbalanced and inclined to imagine things.

So she didn't dare mention the clippings until she had them in her possession and was able to produce them for Levering to see.

So she remained silent.

The one thing that Jeanne was thankful for, was that Max Bennett hadn't been brought into the case. Neither Clyde nor Norwood had mentioned him. In fact, it was doubtful whether the college president knew anything about him.

Clyde did, though. He had teased her about her handsome captain. Had even pretended to be jealous of him. It was all a part of a game he was playing she could see that, now. What a fool she had been to put her implicit trust in a man who turned out to be such a traitor.

But on the other hand, why shouldn't she? Clyde hadn't aroused her suspicions—at first. Nothing he had done had brought the slightest doubt in her mind. He had acted like anyone normally would under the circumstances.

Diamond Ring.

Levering interrupted her thoughts by taking a ring from a drawer of his desk — a diamond ring.

"We found this in your purse, Miss Hallard," he said. "Is it yours?"

"Yes — well, yes — I mean, no," the girl stumbled.

"Well, which is it? Yes or no? You surely should be able to make up your mind about such a simple thing. Where did you get it? Did a man give it to you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Who?"

"It has absolutely nothing to do with this matter. There is no sense in dragging another innocent person into this mess of lies Dr. Clyde has got me in."

Her voice was deflated.

"Now that's no way to talk, Miss Hallard. I've tried to be kind to you. You should be grateful. Besides, I have other ways of finding out what you know. You'll simply save me a little time. Come, now, who gave you the ring?"

"The ring belongs to Max Bennett—Capt. Max Bennett."

"Ah, yes. I remember now that I met Capt. Bennett at Mrs. Wards, too. Yes I am sure I did. He was with you then. Did he give you the ring?"

"It's his ring," Jeanne repeated, emphatically. "I was going need to go into all the row she and Max had had at the Ward apartment. He had left the ring at the ring at Lucia as he stamped angrily out the door."

"How long have you known Captain Bennett?"

"Since I first came to Shelton. I met him at Mrs. Ward's the day I arrived. I was asked there to tea — he was a guest, also."

"I see," Levering said. He mentioned one of his men over and whispered something to him.

"That will be all for the time being," Levering said. "You will remain in our custody."

"We may go, too?" Dr. Norwood inquired.

"Yes, Doctor, both you and Clyde are free to go."

"That's monstrous!" Jeanne cried out. "I tell you Dr. Clyde is the man you're looking for — not me. The F. B. I. chief in Washington knows Bennett. He nodded to a matron who had been sitting in a corner of the room. She arose quickly, crossed the floor and took the girl by the arm.

"Come on along now, please," she said. She led the stunned girl from the room and back to the cell where she had spent the night.

Jeanne suddenly realized how hopeless everything was. Even with Max Despite their spat the night before she was certain things could have been smoothed over.

Now it was all different. She was accused and the one man she had relied upon, Dr. Clyde, had turned on her and distorted everything she said. He had even intimated strongly that she was mentally unbalanced.

Max would hate her. He wouldn't want anything to do with a girl who was even suspected of having been a spy for the country.

She had no doubt that when Levering whispered to his aide, he had been directing him to locate Max and bring him in for questioning.

Her mind in a turmoil, time passed swiftly and the matron brought her lunch before she knew it. She was anywhere near noon.

Immediately afterwards, she was taken to Levering's office again. On the way there, she trembled at the thought of meeting Max under these circumstances.

Camillien Houde Now Released From Internment

Montreal, Aug. 17. (CP)—Camillien Houde, stormy petrel of municipal and provincial politics in Quebec for two decades, today will meet his family on his way back from four years' internment. After a day's stop-over, he will arrive here tomorrow evening.

Mrs. Houde and two of her daughters left by train at an undisclosed point on his journey from Fredericton where he arrived late yesterday from an internment camp.

Meanwhile stickers calling upon the population of Montreal to go down to Central Station Friday evening to greet its former mayor started to appear on lamp-posts and store-windows throughout the city early this morning.

While Mr. Houde at Fredericton refused to meet newsmen and talk about his plans or expectations, Mrs. Houde said that she and her husband, who was arrested "in 1940 for violation of Defence of Canada regulations after he issued a statement advising the people of Montreal to disregard National Registration, would "first of all sit down in a long crowd with their big family and his plans are pretty well undecided".

Mrs. Houde said that her husband never felt unhappy while in the internment camp, but that he would miss the friendship of "a thousand friends" he made there.

Mr. Houde himself was described by persons who met him at Fredericton as the "picture of health" and in a long crowd with people swirling around during his short stay in the New Brunswick capital.

Loss Negligible In Small Fire At Gas Plant

Fire of undetermined origin broke out in the elevator shaft at the Belleville Gas Works and coke plant on Church St, shortly before noon today. City firemen had to empty the use of chemicals before the stubborn oil-smoke fire could be brought sufficiently under control to use the fire hose. Damage to the building, the fire had broken out at the top of the shaft making access to the original blaze rather difficult.

It is reported that an accumulation of oil of, grease and coal dust, formed around the top of the gasholder elevator shaft, could easily have been ignited by friction under the continually hot weather conditions of late, or that a spark from a motor could have been responsible for the outbreak. The damage to property was reported negligible.

When the fire department arrived the volumes of heavy smoke were pouring from the top of the gasholder.

The shaft was drenched to prevent any possible recurrence.

CANADIANS USED IN ASSAULT ON SOUTHERN FRANCE

Presumably Troops in Action Members of Special Service Force

New York, Aug. 17—(CP)—First definite word of Canadian participation in the South France invasion was contained today in a dispatch from Sub-Lt. Scot Young of the Royal Canadian Navy.

Reporting activities of Canadians assault craft, Young, a former Canadian Press staff writer added: "Landing craft from one ship carried Canadian and American troops to assault the French Isle de Levant."

No further identification of the Canadians was given but presumably they were members of the special service forces, dubbed by the Germans as "the men with funny faces and dirty faces" which fought in Italy.

There was speculation that this was the force involved when the Spanish radio nationality reporter without Allied confirmation—Tuesday that one of the first Allied assault craft to arrive on a beach in Southern France "was loaded with Canadian and French soldiers."

Highly trained parachute troops, mountain fighters and infantrymen, the special service unit would be likely to be first of those picked for an invasion. The force was used to help beat the Axis bridgehead in Italy and the Canadian was among the first to enter Rome after its fall.

New Gyro Gun Sight Praised by U.K. Fliers

London, Aug. 17. (CP)—A gyroscopic gun sight described officially as "a remarkable invention in the accuracy" now is in use on R.A.F. fighter planes, the air Ministry disclosed yesterday night.

It eliminates to the last degree the chances of error due to human failure, the ministry added.

Pilots praised highly the new sight, details of which were not disclosed.

"As long as you have that thing on your aircraft you can't miss," one flight lieutenant said. "The sight is intended for shooting at speed from difficult angles, but even from dead astern or head-on positions where its gyro itself is not needed the sight is very much better than the old ring and bar sight."

Self-Propelled 25-Pounder New Canuck Weapon

Ottawa, August 17 — (CP)—Canada has designed and produced a powerful new weapon—a self-propelled 25-pounder full-tracked, self-propelled gun mount known as the "Sexton"—which will soon be displaying its power in France, Munitions Minister Howe announced, Wednesday night.

Built only in Canada, this new "secret weapon" already has been made in sufficient quantities to supply the Canadian Army and now is being made for the British army, he said. It has been in action in Normandy and perhaps in the new invasion in Southern France.

The Sexton travels on tracks, serves as an artillery unit in armored formations and also is used as tank buster.

A modification of the Canadian-designed Ram tank, it actually is a turretless tank carrying a single 25-pounder gun. It has the same speed in land as the Ram and the fastest Allied tanks and fires with "great effect" at high speed and long range.

The gun for the new mount is virtually the same as the 25-pounder which stopped Rommel at El Alamein and has been used with great effectiveness in all subsequent British and Allied engagements. Its accuracy, mounting, the mobility and usefulness of the 25-pounder have been more than trebled.

Operating as a single unit, it dispenses with the standard artillery tractor and trailer, and carries within itself its crew of four and its ammunition. Its great speed and mobility, Mr. Howe explained, fit as an air-cooled aviation engine situated at the rear. Its gun fires from a frontal position, with a lateral traverse of 40 degrees and depressed nine degrees below the horizontal.

This "blitz mount" is open topped and provides some protection for the crew to approximately shoulder height all round, with higher and heavier shielding in front. Equipment for the crew includes periscopes for use when no fired free or from mountings, as well as sub-machine guns and rifles.

Each vehicle is fitted out with wireless sets to permit control the crew to talk to each other, to crews in other armored vehicles, to headquarters and to distant establishments.

Mr. Howe said in his announcement that Canada could "rightly take pride in the inventiveness of her engineers and skill of her workmen" in turning out this Canadian weapon.

Much of the credit, he added, was owing to the new engineering design branch and the automotive and tank production branch of the Munitions Department.

Many of these Canadian "tank busters" already have been turned out by the government-owned tank arsenal in Montreal.

Before undertaking this contract, the arsenal produced the 40 Ram medium cruiser tanks, as well as a number of grimly 3ct-At tanks, the Canadian version of the U.S. Sherman, and a few other types of armored vehicles.

The guns are produced by the Canada Car and Foundry Co. in more than 2,000 since the spring of 1941, including 1,644 units on standard tank carriages.

The Canadian Ram, from which the Sexton was developed, was designed by Canadian engineers. Manufacturing from the spring of 1941 until the summer of 1943, the Ram incorporated the best features of British and American medium cruiser tanks, plus several new Canadian innovations, including the one-piece cast-iron upper hull.

Couldn't Raise Arms Above Head, Pains Were So Sharp

Syntone Brings First Relief To Nearby Resident After Months of Suffering; Had Rheumatic Pains in Joints and Muscles; Backache and Constipation.

"It was almost impossible for me to raise my arms above my head due to the terrible sharp pains in my arms and shoulders," said Mr. Michael Dewan, well known farmer of Ktrock, Ontario, in a recent report.

"For many months I had suffered from severe rheumatic pains and soreness all through my joints and muscles. I was also troubled with backache to no end. At night the pain was so bad I couldn't sleep. My back ached all the time and I had to get up several times each night to relieve my kidneys. I was constipated and had frequent stomach upsets. My appetite left me. I felt tired and sour most and I'd belch up bits of food, undigested food.

"My condition kept getting worse in spite of everything I took, but I had been reading a lot about Syntone helping others and after only a few weeks of using it I felt a lot better. From the first bottle I noticed was that my bowels began moving regularly and I wasn't having any gas, sourness or belching after meals. Then, one day the pains began to go from my arms and shoulders. Now I am like a different person. The soreness is gone out of my joints and muscles and I have no trouble with backache. I am able to sleep soundly through the night and feel fine and rested and good and rested and ready for work in the morning."

If you have rheumatic pains or suffering as I did, about Syntone. It's a great medicine.

Syntone is made from 13 of Nature's finest herbs and roots. It acts on stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels ... aids in the elimination of excess acid and poisonous waste matter from the system and improves assimilation of food for increased strength and energy.

U.S. TANK COLUMNS 12 MILES WEST OF PARIS RESISTANCE CRUMBLING IN SOUTHERN FRANCE

Germans South Of Seine Retreat Toward Rouen

1st Canadian Army Thrusts In Direction of Le Havre

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 18 —(AP)— American armored patrols were reported operating today in the vicinity of Paris, with its famous Eiffel Tower already in sight, and 1st Canadian Army forces thrust eastward along the Normandy coast in the direction of Le Havre.

The German-controlled Scandinavian telegraph bureau said American tank columns were only 12 miles west of Paris, and that there was a "war of movement" adjacent to the capital. Transocean said U. S. armor had reached Rambouillet, 30 miles southwest of Paris on a highway near Chartres. On another Chartres-Paris highway to the south, German reports had placed an American spearhead at St. Arnoult, 33 miles from Paris.

Action Captured

A field dispatch disclosed the American approach to Paris with out inching how close the patrols had penetrated.

Allied Headquarters announced the fall of Authon, 30 miles southwest of Paris, and Orsay, 18 miles southwest of Etampes. Five miles nearer than advance elements had previously been placed officially.

"We are pushing eastward along the whole of our northern sector," Headquarters said in announcing the coastal thrust by the 1st Canadian Army in eastern Normandy.

The gap between Canadian and American forces south of Falaise was narrowed to two or three miles as Canadian and Polish troops captured Trun, 10 miles southeast of Falaise, after a speedy drive which netted a number of towns and villages.

Lt.-Gen. Crerar, 1st Canadian Army commander, described the Germans as "very hungry." Correspondents reported finding the cooks which captured Falaise yesterday.

Gen. Crerar said: "We shall shortly knock him (the enemy) out."

Authon was captured by an American 3rd Army armored column in a lightning drive 31 miles due east of Chartres beyond the Aunay river.

CBS quoted the BBC as saying U. S. spearheads had reached "the outskirts of Paris."

Giving instructions to patriots within the city, a Supreme Headquarters spokesman said over the American broadcasting station in Europe that "the day is not far off when you will have to rise and chase out the enemy with the accomplices."

"You can already hear the guns and soon you will hear the rumble of the tanks," the spokesman added.

The Germans have all but abandoned their efforts to stem the bloody efforts to escape due eastward through the Argentan gap with their columns now in full flight to the northeast in an attempt to break out of the Allied armor that has lunged forward in an effort to thwart this move.

The total number of prisoners taken by the 1st Army alone reached 61,156 this morning.

The supreme command threw another cloak of silence over operations south of Argentan and west of Paris but it was obvious that a new trap for the German 7th army could be formed as the Americans drove to the Seine west of Paris.

London newspapers gave the German frontier reports saying Hitler's highest military adviser had urged him to withdraw German troops from all of France in the next four weeks to avoid destruction of the most of his forces.)

While it was apparent that Gen. Eisenhower could not overlook a chance to capture Paris quickly, it also was apparent that the Allies are not going to permit the same sort of blunder to be committed on the French capital instead of striking north to the Seine the opportunity of turning west on channel coast for a double invasion of England.

In Brittany, the long siege of St. Malo continued when the rock-bound citadel finally sent up the white flag. Only Quiberon remained in Allied Brittany now is cleared of Germans from Cherbourg peninsula to Lorient and St. Nazaire.

The Allied advances placed nearly a dozen key airfields in France within Allied possession.

Hitler's order that the German armor had abandoned efforts to smash the way through Argentan and had wheeled to the northeast in an attempt to plug Falaise gap.

Headquarters announced last night that the 4th and 6th armored divisions and the 5th motorized infantry division among the American forces in France.

CANADIAN CORVETTE REGINA SUNK ON INVASION DUTIES

Sinking of H.M.C.S. "Regina" while on invasion duties was announced Thursday by Hon. Angus L. Macdonald, Minister of National Defence for Naval Services. The "Regina" is the 17th Canadian war vessel to be lost since the outbreak of the present war. Casualties include two dead and 27 missing.

H.M.C.S. "Regina," pictured here, had previously seen service in the North Atlantic and the Mediterranean. While serving in the latter area, she engaged and sank an Italian submarine with gunfire and took 19 prisoners. One of the first of the revised corvettes, the "Regina" was commissioned in January, 1942.—(R.C.N. Photo.)

Reported to have died in hospital following the sinking of the Regina is Surgeon Lieutenant John Charles Henry Rathbone, Regina, Sask., city, after which the corvette was named.

Killed in action was AB. Joseph Melbourne Saulnier, Digby County, N.S. A.B. Saulnier was mentioned in dispatches for his part in the battle in which the Regina destroyed an Italian submarine in the Mediterranean.

Lieut. Jack W. Radford, of Sydney, N.S., who is reported safe following the sinking of the Regina. Lieut. Radford has commanded the Regina since September.

ALLIED BOMBERS TRY TO PREVENT ESCAPE ATTEMPT

Blast Concentration Of River Barges On Seine River To Be Used by Germans

16 BRIDGES ATTACKED

London, Aug. 18 (AP)—Allied planes scoured German troops both west and east of the Seine escape barrier today and smashed a combined attempt of the German air force by shooting down 23 enemy planes in a series of air battles.

As doughty Allied fighters battled at swarms of Focke-Wulfs and Messerschmitts the skies over the Seine campaigning against German forward air bases made the Nazis pay.

A force of heavyweights bashed the Nove Fond, 90 miles north of Paris.

Then a second force of several hundred heavy bombers bombarded bases at Mesz, Nancy, Juvincourt and Romilly-Sur-Seine. They also hit an airplane factory near Metz.

The Germans were reported concentrating barges on the Seine for the "Dunkirk" escape attempt.

The German Air Force staged a desperate 11th-hour attack over the battle front at Northern France, but met a jolting setback.

In a flurry, more to slam the merciless Allied raking of retreating German columns from the air, the enemy threw up an unusually large swarm of fighters.

Pouring in R. A. F. fighter squadrons took them on and swiftly shot down 16 with a single loss.

Medium bombers spanning the Rhine River west of the Seine were attacked yesterday by German medium and light bombers, seeking to impede the flight of German troops from the east of Normandy. Allied Supreme Headquarters said.

Mosquitos of the R. A. F. bomber command hammered at the South Beveland canal in the city of Mauns heim during the night and mines were laid in enemy waters, air ministry says.

A small force of American heavy bombers attacked the Nove Fond air forces third year of operations, continued a record which the U.S. air force is smashing front line air bases with an attack today on the field at Nove, 90 miles north of Paris.

Air Other operations yesterday R. A. F. Mosquitos plunged a profusion of bombs into Germany's defenses on the Seine from the Falaise-Argentan gap.

R. A. F. heavy bombers attacked shipping at besieged Brest yesterday. Fighter-bombers of the 2nd tactical divisions might be attempting an escape.

Tense Situation In Florence Much Easier

Rome, Aug. 18—(AP)—The tense situation in the northern portions of Florence, into which German tanks and armored cars reported to have penetrated, was described officially today as "much easier" today, but there' still was a certain amount of enemy sniping from the northwest and northeast sectors.

Activity along the rest of the Italian front as a whole remained slight, being limited almost entirely to minor patrol clashes and artillery duels. The enemy along the north bank of the Rano, however, has been very active according to probing American patrols, bringing down artillery concentrations and a number of points.

Indian patrols of the Eighth army found Rosano, 1 1/2 miles south of Fontassieve in the upper Thet valley, had been abandoned by the enemy, who also appeared to have given up some outposts further east. American mortar fire destroyed four enemy boats in the Arno River north of Latonia, and shells fire knocked out one German self-propelled gun.

Allies Fan Out Through Valleys Of Maritime Alps

General and Staff Along With 7,000 Prisoners Taken

By EDWARD KENNEDY
(A.P. Staff Writer)

Rome, Aug. 18 (AP) — Enemy resistance in Southern France was officially reported crumbling today before the advance of Allied forces now consolidating into a mighty striking force by the union of all the elements landed on the Riviera beachhead from the sea and air.

German prisoners, including a general and his staff, were estimated in total 7,000 with the count still incomplete.

Maj.-Gen. Alexander M. Patch's forces struck inland through the valleys of the maritime Alps and spread out 30 airline miles along the coast both east and west.

Six Nice airfields, however, big Le field, official reports placed them within five miles of the once great French naval base of Toulon and within six miles of Cannes.

Broadcasts hinted that the resort town already had been penetrated.

The Allied forces already possess a big chunk of the main lateral road across Southern France, which in this area parallels the coast about a dozen miles inland. There were a considerable distance along the road that runs into the Rhone Valley by way of Aix-en-Provence, 16 miles north of Marseilles.

The situation in Southern France was going so well that Mediterranean air forces were able to divert heavy bombers to Balkan targets again. Tactical aircraft, as well, are the skies in support of ground troops without meeting any opposition.

The Nazi command had entrusted the defence of the invasion area to two German infantry divisions, the 242nd and the 148th. The main Allied thrust was made between those two units, creating considerable confusion among enemy troops already battered by the bombers.

While the invaders have extended their beachhead 50 airline miles along the coast, actually it is double that distance because of the toe formations.

Officially the troops of Gen. Patch's 25 miles inland, but unofficial reports put them beyond thirty miles.

The last pocket of resistance on the Hyeres Islands off the coast was eliminated when big guns of an Allied battleship pounded the Isle of Port-Cros.

Full 24 hours after the Allied landings four miles southwest of Cannes, gave the troops a full view of the important city across the Gulf of Napoule.

A naval communique disclosed that Allied warships, including a general and his staff, were estimated in total 7,000 with the count still incomplete.

Sick, Wounded Reach Halifax

Halifax, Aug. 18 —(CP)— The Canadian hospital ship Lady Nelson has arrived here, carrying sick and wounded servicemen from the French and Italian battlefronts. The passenger list of 666 consists mainly of khaki-clad members of the Canadian army.

Lieut.-Col. G. Burkitt, Kingston, Ont., was among the Italian veterans on the liner. He told of the trans-Italy dust of a fighting Canadian field regiment and the crack Nazi corps known as "Goering's Own." From the battle-scarred mountains around Cassino to the final cracking of the steel-clad Gustav line the Canadians and the Germans matched blow for blow.

"Goering's Own was one of the few clean-fighting German regiments and we were proud to have beaten them," said Lieut. Burke. He spoke of seeing many Nazi prisoners from various sectors of the Italian front who were not over 18 years old.

The invalided soldiers, many of them bandaged and wounded, were uniformly cheerful, and happy to be back in Canada. They knew for their hands and today.

Local Stories, Page 12

Warships that bombarded the shore in the invasion operations formed a ring of fire about 10 miles inch calibre and above, and of these 13,000 were 15-inch or larger. Results were reported as "most effective in neutralizing enemy artillery."

Front dispatches said last night that the Canadians had driven four German anti-invasion defences before the Germans, which had been swung against them at right angles to the shoreline.

Inland in a great arc between the 50-mile-long beachhead. the Canadian, British and American troops yesterday seized five strategic road centres uniting them in the eastern Riviera sector with those of Toulon and Marseille.

CORVETTE REGINA LOST IN INVASION WATERS, 2 KILLED

27 Crew Listed as Missing and Eight Now in Hospital

SIXTY SURVIVORS

Ottawa, Aug. 18 (CP)—The Canadian corvette Regina, a stout little sub-hunter that towed the Atlantic and Mediterranean on escort duties, has been lost in the invasion waters with two of her crew dead and 27 others listed as missing.

There were 60 survivors—eight of them now in hospital—Defence Minister Macdonald announced Thursday night by Navy Minister Macdonald.

The brief announcement merely said the Regina was damaged—the cause was not disclosed—when she went to the assistance of a merchant ship "in difficulties in Invasion waters." She sank before she could be beached in shallow water.

The Regina, 1,015-ton Flower-class warship and the seventh corvette to be lost in this war, was commanded by Lieut. Jack W. Radford of Sydney, N.S., who was among the survivors.

Commissioned early in 1943 after being built at Marine Industries at Sorel, Que., she was one of the first revised corvettes which succeeded the old "flower" class corvettes.

Early in her career the Regina made a successful search for survivors of a torpedoed vessel, and later was attached to the western escort forces until taken to Sydney, N.S., for refitting.

Back to the wars, the Regina went into the Mediterranean, where she engaged in a spectacular duel with an Italian submarine. Sighting the U-boat, the Regina brought it to the surface with depth charges and then polished it off with terrific gunfire. The sub sank and 21 survivors were picked up.

Ldg. Stoker Eric Cook Receives Injuries When Corvette Regina Sunk

Listed as "hospitalized, not seriously," in the casualty lists of the Canadian corvette, H.M.C.S. "Regina" sank while going to the assistance of a merchant vessel in difficulties on D-Day, is Leading Stoker Eric Cook, son of Mr. Robert Cook, 30 Catherine Street.

Mr. Cook, seen today, had no word of his son being in action nor in hospital and stated he had not heard from him for the past two months. Mrs. Cook is also accompanying the casualty list, however, would indicate that Stoker Cook is not seriously injured.

The twenty-two-year-old sailor has been plenty of service during his two-and-one-half years in the Royal Canadian Navy. Enlisting in Kingston in 1942 he trained at that place and was later sent to Halifax where he completed his training before going to sea.

He has been assigned to several ships of the R.C.N. and has seen service in the Mediterranean and in and about Iceland. His ship, the ill-fated "Regina," was one of the convoying craft on D-Day.

Born in Winnipeg, Eric and his family came to Picton some years ago. He attended public school here and also was a student at Belleville Collegiate Institute. Athletically inclined he was a member of several softball squads here, including those coached by "Red" Townsend. After leaving school and prior to his joining the Navy, he was associated with the firm of Howe and Hagerman as a plumber.

A brother, Bob, 28, is in Italy serving as a sergeant in charge of a Bren gun carrier with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. Bob enlisted four-and-one-half years ago and has been overseas ever since. He has served with the "Steely Pic" during that time.

Mrs. Bernice Lundberg, war worker at Universal Moulded Products, and a contestant in the recent War Workers' competition staged by the Belleville Kiwanis Club, is a sister.

Maquis Control Haute Savoie

The Swiss-French frontier at Annemasse, Aug. 18 —(AP)—Three hundred Germans of Annemasse capitulated to French partisans and 150 others fled to internment in neutral Switzerland after a sharp three-hour battle early today.

The victory gave the maquis full control of the Haute Savoie frontier along the south shore of Lake Geneva from St. Gingolph, westward to a point just outside Bellegarde, and inland to a depth of almost 75 miles.

The exuberant population of approximately 1,500 paraded the streets singing the Marseillaise.

RCAF Develops New High-Altitude Oxygen Valve After 3 Years Research

Toronto, Aug. 18—(CP)—A valve which supplies oxygen for high altitude combat according to the airman's need has been developed after nearly three years of research at the Royal Canadian Institute of the R. C. A. F., in conjunction with Air Force aeronautical engineers at Air Force Headquarters Press release said today.

Lack of lighting in the upper air on oxygen valve may mean life or death to the airman and their new "demand valve" Air Force scientists had to evolve one which would turn on oxygen when the airman breathed in and turn it off when he breathed out.

It was necessary also for the valve to deliver different proportions of oxygen in relation to height, since considerably more oxygen is required in high altitudes.

The valve's principles are simple, said the release. A diaphragm regulates the frequency of oxygen intake. As the airman breathes the diaphragm pressed on a tiny spring which releases the proper amount of oxygen. As the aircraft rises a metal bellows expands and makes the mixture inhaled richer in oxygen. Simple—but the Germans have been working on the problem for more than 10 years.

The German Air Force introduced the demand valve principle in 1939 and has since improved on it ever since. Captured German documents rendered here show continual changes, but the R. C. A. F. valve, weighing just 1 1/2 pounds, is the slung around a pilot's neck, is half the size and weight of that of the R. A. F.

The R. C. A. F. began development work in 1941 under Flt. Lt. W. J. Fry of Weston, Ont., O. U. K. biologist, and Prof. Grayson Smith of the Physics Department University of Toronto.

"After turning out six main types and more than 150 modifications, we find that Canadians can make precision parts better than anything the Germans are doing in this field," said Flt. Lt. Fry. K. W. Ferguson, medical officer in charge of experimental work at C. U.

Columbian Squires Presented With Charter at Testimonial Banquet Given by K. of C.

Officers and members of the St. Michael's Columbian Squires, numbering 41, received their charter from J. J. Conroy, executive director of the Boy Life Branch of the Knights of Columbus at a testimonial banquet tendered the Belleville organization by the Belleville branch of the Knights of Columbian council 1004, held in the Grand Opera House on Monday night under the chairmanship of Grand Knight Thomas Geoghegan. Catholic Church dignitaries from all parts of the district were present to honor the youthful Columbian Squires upon the receipt of their International Charter, K. of C. officials also paying their respects.

This is the first time I have had the honor of presenting a Columbian Squire charter in Canada, I might say that this organization is of International breadth and organized in the interests of future Knights," stated Mr. Conroy, who came from New Haven, Conn., for the occasion of making the charter presentation. The charter was accepted by Chief Squire R. J. Mahoney on behalf of the Club No. 418, who assured the donor the members would do their best to live up to the memory of being charter members of the St. Michael's Columbian Squires. There are 30 charter members of the organization, but the ceremony revealed he has been given dispensations of the splendid church edifice's new name, which is now the St. Michael's Church parish among the youth of the parish.

Monsignor Nicholson Heard.

The principal speaker was Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson, V.G., M.C., who spoke on the basis of Christian Citizenship, as set forth in "Sands of Character". Monsignor Nicholson warned the Columbian Squires that "most possess "mind" if they are to be upright Christian Canadians. You can get this opportunities in a fraternity of Christian youth. It is open to both high and with pride," concluded Monsignor Nicholson, "when added Columbian Squires were originally organized for boys' welfare work.

During the evening Squire Jack Doyle made a surprise presentation to Knight Jack Ryan, sports director at St. Michael's Academy, upon the occasion of his forthcoming marriage.

Padre Major McCabe, recently released from overseas service, was also in attendance at the above of the Columbian Squires, the future leaders of the Church Militant. Padre McCabe paid special tribute to Sir. Conroy, Director of the Boy Life Local Circle, who assisted the sponsoring Knights of Columbus in the organization of the Squires. Rev. Dr. O'Donnell acted as chairman for the banquet meeting.

A delightful program was presented by members of the local Columbian Squires and included a vocal solo by Squire Bob Lacy, piano solo by Squire Gordon Hall, vocal by Squire Bob Fluney, vocal by Harold Barrett, who has sold a song leader. Mrs. Wm. Grant was the accompanist.

Gave Outline of Movement.

Squire Boyd Upper gave an outline of the aims of the Columbian Squire youth movement," while Squire Jack Doyle spoke on the outline of the "History of Columbian Squires" which has proved educational. "The Squire movement among Catholic boys was first introduced in Belleville in April 16th, 1944, the first initiation held at Grand Knight Jack Ryan's home, among the youthful speaker. Church dignitaries from nearby areas also attended the meetings, throughout Eastern Ontario were also present during the new Squire movement among the teen-aged of the Catholic Church. Squire Doyle already sponsored Circles in Lindsay and Peterborough, and Oshawa, the latter on April 16th, 1944, Grand Knight O. A. Lee, District Deputy and Rev. P. J. Carroll.

Splendid Crowd Again on Hand For the Karnival

Bed-Making Contest Between Firemen and Policemen a Real Stunt

VARIED PROGRAM

Threatening skies with an occasional drizzle of rain did not deter a large crowd from attending the official night of the Kiwanis Karnival here Thursday evening, when the big event in the attraction of the Karnival, the drawing for the $1,000 "Victory" ticket and other prizes, and with it, another milestone in the active life of the Kiwanis service club will have been passed.

Harold Chairman H. H. Reed, presented stiff opposition to his major rival, Jupiter Pluvius last night with an outstanding stage show. A fine drizzle that momentarily threatened to develop into a downpour, fell during the early part of the evening but the stage performers had enough on the ball to keep the crowd in an interested mood.

From an actual comedy standpoint, the bed-making competition between hasty Police Constable Roy Doherty and Bill Evans, and Fire Chief Harry Clair and L. Wilson, stood the crowd on their figurative ears. Both teams had to do their wares as much at home with mattress, blankets, sheets, pillows and crochet hooks, while the fastidious fire laddies displayed a knowledge of bed-making that will enable all future alibis if the Misses should ever be left responsible for such household duties in the future.

Bed Sheet in Wind

The team of Evans and Doherty had their three sheets in the wind when they had to develop into a 22 foot tangled up with the blankets. The firemen were quietly and efficiently about their business and wound up assisting the limbs of the Stop Chest, top and bottom, assisted from exhaustion, and 'laid down to sleep.

The firemen were presented with the winners prizes of toy Dress-Rite Ladies' Hats for their efforts in contest with yoyos.

Herbert Hyatt, West Lake, an amateur magician delighted the crowd with a fine exhibition of delighted the crowd with a fine exhibition of sleight-of-hand and tricks of magic. A clever act, it proved very popular with the crowd, especially the younger element.

Sammy Barbara Dimeni, well-known singer and dancer offered a song-and-dance routine, that brought out the best of her talents.

The ever-popular Ethel Smith, was in splendid voice and received the ovation with her rendition of several popular numbers. Her accompanist, Grant Foster and sister dance duo from Corbyville, displayed plenty of talent with a pert and dance act and received rounds of prolonged applause. Both were known as Mr. W. Grant and William Navin.

Fire Became Slippery

Corporal A. Bell, slack wire artiste of the Canadian Army delighted the crowd with his wire performance despite the fact, that the light drizzle caused the wire to become slippery and more or less dangerous.

Danny Smith, local entertainer was again in good form and kept the audience in a genial mood with songs and guitar selections that brought forth rounds of applause.

The show over, the crowd melted away to patronize the Street of Chance, where slightly damp but energetic midmen catered to their sporting wants. Booths again did a fine business and Karnival officials however did not have much effect on the general attendance.

A fine stage show had been prepared for tonight by Chairman John Reed, and there will be a fitting climax to an outstanding Kiwanis community event.

Karnival Program For Closing Night

As a parting salute and tribute to the generous and patronage of the public. Chairman Jack White and his fellow members of the Kiwanis Club Karnival committee, have brought together an outstanding array of talent for the final stage show of the Karnival tonight.

Seen at the Armouries "theatre" will be Danny Boy Smith, singing guitarist; the Dancing Demovens, juvenile singers and dancers; dainty Hilda Jeffers, Marie Nash, who will be heard in guitar music; golden-voiced Reinel Smith, a consistent favorite with Belleville audiences; Arthur Duby, sweet-voiced song soprano; Corporal Bell, Karnival favorite in slack wire acts; Billie Grant, Belleville's own expert xylophonist and others.

Climaxing the show will be a "struggle royal" in the bed-bestowing-of-war teams of the Kiwanis and Firemen service clubs.

A lot of good natured rivalry exists between the two clubs, and the "pill" should be productive of not only a feat of strength but a lot of comedy as well.

Tonight at eight o'clock on the Armouries Lawn.

KILLED IN CAR

Wing Cmdr. 'Windy' Reid Commander Of 'Nighthawk' Squadron Home After Two Years Duty Overseas

Editor's Note: Wing Commander Reid here at present is a visitor in Belleville, is known to a large number of friends and relatives, having a year's residence in Belleville. He was formerly flying instructor at the Trenton Air Station. Mrs. Reid and Mrs. Reid, resided at 85 Victoria Avenue. Recognized as the outstanding instructor, practically every pedestal plane at Trenton, "passed through his hands" before graduation. Friends here classify him as a "born flyer" and who earned a well-deserved popularity during his stay, sojourn here. The story appeared in the Kingston Whig-Standard.)

One of Kingston's top air aces, Wing Cmdr. J. A. W. "Windy" Reid 264 Toronto Street has arrived home on leave after completing a complete tours in the European theatre, shooting down three enemy aircraft, being assisted in dig catches and flying practically every type of aircraft from the Mosquito to the Anson.

Unusual in itself is his record of aircraft flown. He has flown single engine, twin engine, jet-motor and four motor aircraft. Among the types flown are Mosquitoes, Beaufighters, Liberators, Spitfires, Hurricanes, Lancaster, Stirlings, Halifaxes, Fortress, Wellingtons, and Hudsons. In all he has flown over 40 types of aircraft and that's a record in any man's language.

For the past year and a half he has been in command of the "Nighthawk" fighter Squadron which took over from Group Captain Paul Davoud, another Kingston man, in January, 1943, this squadron operates at night using Mosquitoes and "Windy" flies them better than any other aircraft now in use.

His three enemy aircraft have all been knocked down since D-Day. Previous operations are described as "pretty grim." His squadron was on Channel and Coastal Defence patrol since "Jerry" wasn't doing much raiding, things were pretty dull.

Things started to "liven up", after D-Day though, and from then on he got "His first "kite," a Heinkel 177. He was on the usual night operations and came up behind the "Jerry" on its way to do some damage to Canadian troops. "When we were near enough and it had been identified as an enemy plane I pressed the old button and up she went."

When told that sounded very easy he agreed and added that type of "kill" was just as easy as it sounded.

His other two "kills" both Junkers 88's, were shot down in the same manner. He found them while over France.

Gets Robot

A robot bomb also fell victim to his guns shortly after D-Day. His found it over the North Sea just after it had been launched. A couple of bursts finished it off. This brought the subject of robots and he described the general hazards of flying in the area populace when the robot first started "coming over". On the first night about one could figure out "what the score was."

At his home WC. Reid has two films exposed when he shot down two of his "kills." Both films were synchronized with his guns and both show the "Jerry" planes spiralling. Among the many souvenirs is a fan, picked up in Cairo, which was given to him by Group Captain Paul Davoud, whom he described as a "great chap".

Over to "Tojo"

Although he joined in January, 1939, "Windy" wasn't able to get overseas until 1941 when he went to Penn Yan, Connecticut. This was all service over the Atlantic though. During his period with the Ferry Command he saw action in England, Gibraltar, Malta, North Africa and one flight to Russia.

His spent five days in Russia and described the Russians as "swell people fighting a total war."

While in Russia he worked with the British 8th Army and flew the plane that carried to Russian Generalissimo Stalin-Commander, General von Thoma.

His work around Malta was chiefly taking wounded naval personnel out and bringing ground-crew in, one occasion he had to take off with 32 wounded men aboard while "Jerry" was "on the tail." Said, "Once was enough," he added.

Going up the Mediterranean with the enemy on both sides, North Africa, France and Italy, was no picnic, he said, and relief if Ferry Command work in that area was handled by one squadron of which he was in command

Small Girl Injured When She Runs Into Side of Automobile

Trenton (Special) — Barbara Sweet, age 4, daughter of Mrs. Elvan Sweet, 386 Front Street, received head injuries and lacerations to her leg when she ran into the side of a car on Front Street Thursday morning. The car was driven by Burton Leslie, London, Ont.

All Trenton doctors were called and in each case the information was given the doctor was in the Belleville Hospital. The child, whose father is serving with the Canadian Army overseas, was taken to her home. A kitten which she carried at the time she struck the car was killed.

No blame was attached to the driver as the child ran from the west to the east side of the street striking the left rear fender of the car.

The War Today—

Allies Crowd Hitler Into Impossible Position Thru His Stubbornness

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

Hitler's defeat in northwestern France has reached a magnitude that has dragged the hatred corporal face to face with the urgent problem of "where do I go next?"—a tough question for the dictator who again is shouting that "Germany will never surrender."

Hitler's intuition must be roaring into his ears that he ought to form a strong defensive line north of the Seine River which runs through Paris to the English channel. And he ought to continue that line along the historic Marne River which joins the Seine close to the capital and flows eastward from there.

Such a line, of which Paris would form a mighty central anchor, would protect northernmost France. It would guard the vital Nazi coastal defences along the English channel, and the launching grounds of the robot bombs. Finally—and not to be forgotten for a moment in Germany's dire peril—it would shield the Hitlerite scrape route through Belgium into the fatherland.

That's what the Nazi chief ought to do and undoubtedly intended to do. But in his stubbornness to hold what he has stolen he's been crowded into an impossible position almost overnight by the disaster in Normandy and Brittany, and the invasion of Southern France.

Annihilation of enemy forces is what the Allies are after. When the Allies struck Hitler in France he had some 65 divisions for all Western Europe. More than 30 of these have been terribly chopped to pieces, and in some cases virtually wiped out, in the Normandy-Brittany battle.

That leaves the dictator with maybe 30-odd divisions, or say 350,000 soldiers—plus what he can salvage from the wreckage in Northwest France. He can't spare troops from the volcanic Russian front.

Juries.

Travellers' Hotstove Club Holds Annual Corn Roast at Cannifton

One of the most successful gatherings yet held by the Travellers' Hotstove Club took place at the lovely residence of Bert Bolton at Cannifton, on Wednesday evening, upwards of sixty members and guests were in attendance for their second annual corn roast. Those included members from Toronto and almost every centre in Eastern Ontario.

Grant Norton of Heinz Company, president of the Club, welcomed the members at a general meeting held in the Belmont Hotel previous to going to Cannifton, he outlined the object of the Club which he said is only in its infancy.

Tommy Wrightmeyer, chairman of "Peg" Fund, gave a short address in connection with his committee's activities.

Bert Moore, "Iron Fireman" Co., Toronto, also addressed the meeting. He is closely associated with a similar Club in Western Ontario. The grounds at Cannifton presented a very attractive appearance in the starlit night augmented with old-time lanterns swinging in the breeze among the cedars.

The catering was in the very capable hands of Hugh Morton, Bobbie Robinson, Bill Nickle and Bill Mathews.

Community singing was conducted at intervals by Percy Brown and Dan Douglas.

Walter Allore, honorary president, was in attendance and addressed the company which was greatly appreciated.

Bob Allore, medical student at Toronto Varsity, and John Brunell, Belleville, took several fine flashlight pictures of the party.

An evening all too short for the program planned, came to a close on the stroke of midnight, with the singing or the National Anthem.

Will Occupy Germany and Japan

Germany and Japan will know what it is to have Allied armies in occupation. It is the way of showing the Germans what their crimes have brought upon them, it will be a way of proving that the desire to make war is a desire that brings disaster. Once before Germany has been defeated and conquered once again she will be conquered. If she should collapse before her borders are reached the Allied armies will go into Germany. And it will be so with Japan. So spoke President Roosevelt on Thursday and in full harm from a long trip into the Pacific where he saw the evidence of Japan's failing power.

He made clear that the Germans and Japanese will not be able to escape military occupation by unconditional surrender. Germany dodged this by the armistice of 1918 but she won't be allowed to dodge the occupation this time.

He has an effective treatment for the Japanese—to seal them off from the peace-loving nations of the world. The Nipponese will have to prove that they are willing and able to live in peace with peace-loving peoples. The Allies are determined that Japanese imperialism and militarism will never again be permitted to have a chance of menacing the world.

Near Paris

The time approaches when another European capital which has felt Hun domination will soon pass out of control of the Germans. Allied swift columns have been reported at the outskirts of the city of Paris, since 1940 under German domination. Not long ago Rome fell to the conquering Allies. The Hun story had been one of retreat. It is still retreat in Italy. In France it is retreat. This is the pattern of the steady triumph of the Allied Nations.

To France goes a great deal of glory for the stoutness of heart of her people through the years of Hun power. He resistance to itself alive in co-operation with the Free French Movement of General de Gaulle and these two today are a mighty force aiding the liberating legions and armies of land and air and the fleets of airmen. Despite the collaboration-ist element, France kept her soul free from contamination of the Hun and what she is doing today is an earnest of the greater day when she will stand forth as a liberated and free nation to carry on her normal course of development under democracy.

When Paris falls to the Allies including the French the world of freemen will rouse the world with their shouts of joy for it will be another sign of the coming end of German tyranny.

Nazi Failure

The poor-guessing gang of Goebbels and his associates, Hitler failed to miss a guess at the time of the momentous gatherings in the past four years held in several parts of the world and at the time of the visits of the great men of the Allied Powers, failed again this week for they failed to realize or even guess that one of the purposes for which Prime Minister Churchill was in Italy was to see the Allied troops for the latest invasion of France set out.

It remained for the Allied headquarters to reveal that Mr. Churchill saw the troops leave and also that he went by destroyer to watch the landing operations in France on Tuesday morning. Neither did the Huns know that Mr. Churchill had as house guests on the warship, no less than Robert P. Patterson, U. S. Undersecretary of War, and Lieut.-Gen. Brehon R. Somervell, commander of the American Army Service Forces.

A Rome official statement noted that Prime Minister Churchill was "greatly impressed by the clockwork precision of the operation."

Goebbels and his department have made a sorry tale of events, without clockwork precision, in its five years of operation, prognostication, bad guessing, vile propaganda, all indicating that the German reputation for efficiency was not merited as many once believed it to be and that it utterly failed in the real things.

British, American, Russian, other European and Chinese services have been more effective and efficient than the Germans could ever be. Never once did the Hun propagandist guess his the target. So much for Nazi efficiency and the iniquities that Hitler and his crowd have practised in vain to build up a regime of invincible power.

Travelling has been a great asset to the Allies. Not only were her soldiers, sailors, and airmen able to cross many seas, but their chiefs by their meetings through travel have achieved a rich fruitage. Travel is symbolic of the United Nations embodying the sage counsel of the leaders of the many United Peoples. Messrs. Churchill and Roosevelt have travelled far as the continents of Europe, America, Africa and Asia and their associates, the premiers of the Dominions in the Pacific have been on the other continents. There has been a true wide council of many races and many master minds.

Hitler on the other hand is no traveller and never was. He knows the Huns, himself one of them. He has confined himself to the Continent of Europe, mostly Germany and Berchtesgaden part of it. He has as his companions his deputy master minds, the sycophant Mussolini. He has had his own "intuitions" to trust to in the sphere of the high command of the army, he has had the association of the fallen boaster Hermann Goering but the only exploded dictator gabble while he is in sore trouble enough without having to listen to a dismantled associate's lament on the art of failing to conquer and control the world. He has heard the voice of Tojo from afar-off. This was no breadth of mind and sage counsel but just the lust for power and the conferring of associate conspirators against peace.

The widely travelled Allied leaders have in fact represented the world outlook at the same time as representing the United Nations warring against the Axis. Their organization will help much to bring the security that will prevent the revival of Axis evils after the Allies have effectively smashed the German and Japanese power for crime and disorder.

Skirts for Men

(Detroit Free Press)

This being hot weather, let's not get too serious. We have the case of that Pana, Illinois, judge who walked down Main Street the other day wearing a woman's skirt, instead of trousers, because he said he found that garment much cooler.

The gentleman may be an eccentric or maybe he has a sense of humor. Probably running for office this fall and needs publicity. But his argument is sound at that. He is rebuking women who wear trousers, contending that a skirt is much cooler and more comfortable. There is nothing per se, he indicates, about trousers. The Scots and the fighting Greeks have proved for ages.

And every woman wearing slacks will confess, if she is honest, that skirts are more comfortable and much cooler. She only wears 'em because it is the vogue and she thinks it is the vogue and she has to be in fashion. The only legitimate excuse for women's slacks is war work.

We do not choose our own parts in life and we have nothing to do with selecting those parts. Our simple duty is confined to playing them well.—Epictetus.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

(Copyright, 1944, Edgar A. Guest)

Senator Pepper spends the second Sunday of October in a land "Old Folks' Day," in honor of grandpa and grandma.—News Item.

OLD FOLKS' DAY

"Mother," said I, "for forty years
We've shared the family's smiles and tears;
Made feast days, as we've come along,
For every member of the throng;
Christmas and Easter, birthdays, too;
One Sunday set aside for you,
And now the senators discuss
A celebration just for us.

"For forty years we've bought and tied
The gifts for many a blushing bride;
Kept holidays aloof from July the Fourth, Memorial Day,
Thanksgiving Day and Hallowe'en,
With anniversaries in between,
And now, Oh Joy, Ne Ultra Plus!
They want to have a day for us.

"An 'Old Folks' Day' is now proposed,
When autumn's fiscal books are closed,
And loving tributes will be paid
To wrinkled cheeks and temples grayed.
A pipe for grandpa, and a shawl
For grandma's shoulders in the fall,
And those we love to make a fuss
And tell how much they think of us!

"I think I'll toss my cane away
And dance a jig on 'Old Folks' Day'!
I'll turn a cartwheel just to show
I'm still as young as long ago.
You rouge your cheeks and paint your lips,
And redden well your finger tips.
We'll show those kids on 'Old Folks' Day'
At heart we're still as young as they."

Shell-Shock Cases Present Pitiful Picture of Broken Men Says Pyle

By ERNIE PYLE

On the Western Front (by Wireless) — One afternoon I went with our battalion medics to pick up wounded men who had been carried back to some shattered house just behind our lines and to gather some others right off the battlefield.

The battalion surgeon was Capt. Lucien Strawn, from Morgantown, W. Va. He drives his own jeep himself and goes right into the lines with his aidmen.

We drove forward about a mile in our two jeeps, so loaded with litter bearers they were barely riding on the hood. Finally we had to stop and wait until a bulldozer filled a new shell crater in the middle of the road. We had come only about a hundred yards beyond the crater when we ran into some infantry. They stopped us and said:

"Be careful where you're going. The Germans are only 200 yards up the road.

Captain Strawn said he couldn't get to the wounded men that way, and clear the road. The only thing the driver asked was, "How close to the front is it?"

The doctor said, "Well, at least it isn't any closer than you are right now." So the dozer driver agreed to clear the road ahead of us.

While we were waiting a soldier came over and asked the doctor if he had just found in the backyard of a bombed house a little girl with an untouched house left standing in the town and some of the houses full of misery. He looked giddy-aged, and he was pale, partly bald, had a big nose and his face was yellow. He kept constantly twisting. The doctor said he'd just morphine was making him sick.

The doctor took his scissors and began cutting his clothes open to see if he was wounded anywhere except in the arm. He wasn't. But he had been sick at his stomach and then rolled around. He was sure a superman sad sack.

Pretty soon the litter bearers came back. They had three wounded Germans and one American on their litters. Also they had two walking cases—one hearty fellow with a slight leg wound, and one younger one whose hands were trembling from nervous tension.

The doctor asked him what was the matter and he said nothing was, except that he couldn't stop shaking. He said that his legs and nerves were all right, but he just couldn't keep his hands from trembling.

He was a machine gunner on a half-track and had been shell-shocked kindly to him.

"Who was you back?" he asked.

"We've got a new lieutenant," the boy said, "and he told me to come back and get me a pill an aid station for rest."

But the doctor thought a while. "I can't send you to a hospital," the doctor said, "for you'll be all right if you get back and they need men too badly up there."

A look of disappointment passed over the boy's face, but he came back.

"That's what I told the lieutenant," he said. "I think I'm all right to go back."

I could tell the doctor liked his attitude. He also was nothing yellow about the kid.

"I'll tell you. You get on this jeep and go back to the aid station. We will give you some sleeping stuff, and you can just lie around there on the ground for a day or two and you'll be all right."

The doctor then commanded the kid—relieved at even a two-day respite—to help the boy with the wounded men and went back down the road.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Expresses Appreciation For G. H. Stokes' Efforts On Postal Affairs

The Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer.

In looking through the pages of Hansard as of Aug. 13, I noticed two rather interesting contributions to the House of Commons on postal affairs by Mr. Stokes, the member for South Hastings brought up the two following suggestions:

MR. STOKES: Why is it that in the city of Belleville, where we have quite a staff of letter carriers, none of them have been classed as temporary for a number of years? They are veterans. I understand that there was an arrangement by which at least ten per cent of the staff would be classed as temporary, but in this case about forty per cent of our staff is temporary. And the salaries of these men are being kept down. I believe they have very working on salaries of about $1,000 a year, if possible. Some of these men are not made permanent.

MR. MULOCK: I am advised by my officials that the reason is that there are no vacancies on the permanent staff at the present time. So far as the salaries are concerned, I understand that as temporaries their salaries, following the usual practice, which have recently been made, can go up to $1,200 a year. They have been employed for three years. Probably the officials have been looking for permanent vacancies in the staff at Belleville, but I am sure they will be kind enough to give me particulars of the case, and I will be very glad to look into it and give him a reply with full information on the subject.

MR. STOKES: I should like to make a further suggestion on behalf of some of the best of our people who do not get a great deal of pay as one of the country. I speak particularly of those farmers who are getting on in years, who, after a few years ago. When I think of the condition of the roads in the winter, travel out to the corner to get their mail, and the condition of routes have been extended. The rural mail carriers have three times and retrace their steps, but in several instances in my parishes, where I have made applications have been made and have been refused. We were refused on one line where applications in connection with which I have written within

The handkerchiefs were very artistically arranged, spread out with a white lace cloth, centred with sweetpeas in silver bowls and flanked with pink and white tapers in silver candelabars. Mrs. A. Hitchon presented the bride with a ring by Mrs. J. Ashmore. Approximately twenty-five of Marjorie's friends came to greet her and offer their sincere congratulations and best wishes for much future happiness.

Women's Activities

COLLEGE HILL WOMEN'S GROUP

The College Hill Women's Group held the August meeting at the home of Mrs. G. R. Coulter, 7 Bread Street, with fifteen members present.

The 1st Vice President, Mrs. J. Thomson conducted the meeting in the absence of the president. Reports were received from the secretary and treasurer. One complete layette, eight articles of clothing, two quilts were forwarded to Red Shield.

The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Wagg. Mrs. J. M. Wood spoke on "The Life that wins", a life built on love. One must live this Life by attaining the divine mind of Christ, which one finds by being in touch with God. Thus, one will be fitted to right the wrongs that exist and insure a new permanent peace and the brotherhood of man in the post war world.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Wood by Mrs. G. Stanton for this very splendid talk.

A social time, including the serving of lunch by the hostess, concluded the meeting.

The Experts Say

(By The Canadian Press.)

Ottawa, Aug. 18 (CP)—COOKER CARE: For those Canadians enough to own a pressure cooker, Laura Pepper, chief of the Consumer Section of the Agriculture Department, gives these canning points:

Be sure the gaskets in the pet cock, safety valve and pressure gauge are kept clean. A toothpick or sharpened match will keep them clear.

Be sure air is drawn from the cooker before the pressure is allowed to rise. A steady blasting flow of steam for the open petcock is the signal to watch for.

Keep pressure steady by regulating the heat under the cooker; fluctuating pressure draws liquid from the sealers.

Watch until the guage registers the correct pressure and count processing time from that moment.

When processing time is up, cool the cooker gradually; sudden cooling may crack it and again, liquid will be drawn from the sealers.

When the lid's off, leave sealers in the open cooker for a moment or two until violent bubbling ceases. Too sudden a change to room temperature will crack or break the sealers.

FOOD DIVIDENDS

Donors in the title of a Canadian Red Cross Society leaflet which tells good advice on maintaining blood health....even if you are not lucky enough to be a blood donor: Drink three good meals a day with emphasis on foods rich in iron and protein," says the Red Cross. Your share of iron may come from meat, especially liver and kidney; eggs, whole grain cereals and whole wheat bread; green or yellow vegetables; dried peas, beans and lentils. For protein look to meat, fish, eggs and cheese; milk (ten to three glasses daily) and again died beans, peas and lentils.

SUMMER FURNITURE: It usually gets a lot of use and precious little care, but these tips will help: Wicker and reed furniture dust them often with a brush. Wash occasionally with mild, soapy water, rinse and dry.

Raitan and rustic...soap and water treatment again. A coat of varnish or shellac helps retain natural gloss.

JERSEY GIANTS AND ROYALS TIE IN DOUBLE BILL

Jersey City Wins Opener 8-1 But Loses Second 9-1

HEAVY HITTING

By the Associated Press

The torrid fight between Newark and Baltimore for the International League pennant was cooled off a bit by the weather last night which limited the schedule to a twin-bill between Jersey City Giants and Montreal Royals. It resulted in a draw—the Giants winning the opener 8-1 and the Royals taking the night cap 9-1.

Ken Miller of the Giants held the Royals to four hits in the opener to win his seventh victory. He was aided by Steve Ellsworth who drove in two runs with a single and double. He also scored twice himself.

Williams on the part of Young Bob Howison, who asked 12 men and hits another, helped the Royals to gain an early second-game victory. Everyone in the Montreal lineup scored at least once, except shortstop Stan Breard and pitcher Jean Roy.

With all other clubs idle, attention was centred on Eddie (Sherlock) Kobesky, who not only leads league with batting mark of .336 but has also realized his aim since joining the Bisons three years ago—to bat in 100 runs in a season. A two-run homer last Wednesday gave him a total of 103 R.B.I.'s, second only to Howie Moss of the Orioles, who has 112. In 1941 Kobesky knocked in 78 and last year raised his total to 88.

Rough Times Ahead For Nelson, McSpaden

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 18 (AP)—The chips were down and rougher going appeared ahead for Messrs. Byron Nelson of Toledo, O., and Harold McSpaden, Philadelphia, as the last one-two choices in the P.G.A. championship teed off against formidable rivals today in the third round 36-hole matches.

They breezed through the second round competition yesterday but Nelson had a real battle on his hands today with Willie Goggin, White Plains, N.Y., and McSpaden drew a tough one in Ben Hamilton of Evansville, Ind.

Nelson counted out a 7 and 6 victory over Mark Fry, Oakland, Calif., in the second round while Goggin was taking the measure of Ed Manero, Stamford, Conn., 4 and 3.

Nelson fired a morning round score of 69 over the par-72 Manito course but so did Goggin.

McSpaden walloped Frank Annon, Mamaroneck, N.Y., 8 and 7 in the best one-sided ending of the second round, but his showing against par was not much better than Will Nott's who beat Harry Bassler, Culver City, Calif., 6 and 5.

New York, Aug. 18 (CP)—After every fight, welterweight Aaron Perry piles it, slice of sliced fruit in a salad bowl, heaps a quart of chocolate ice cream on it and feasts on the mess. It takes him three days to work off the extra weight, which may explain why manager Harry Garsh expects Aaron to come out of the army as "another" Joe Louis instead of a "miniature" Joe.

George Munger, Penn football coach, devotes his early morning hours to canning vegetables and the victory garden, which is a novelty because gridiron tutors are more accustomed to raising hell.

Babe Ruth argues that big league baseball magnates should do something to encourage eight and nine-year-olds to play ball. "That's when the players of the future are developed," he says. . . . The Green Bay Packers have written all players on their draft list who are in service and who have school work to finish to plan on returning to the campus after the war. Says coach Curley Lambeau: "Competitive places on major league teams will be so tough those players with unfinished school work will be better off to get a degree before yoking a tryout in professional football."

There have been reports from Hamilton that Trimble would succeed Brian Timmis as Hamilton coach.

ST. LOUIS CARDS SOARING AFTER A NEW RECORD

May Have Satisfaction of Tying the Games Won Record Set in 1906

LANIER WINS 10TH

By JACK HAND

Associated Press Sport Writer

No longer content with a mere National League pennant St. Louis Cardinals today soared after an all-time winning record under the impetus of a month-long record of 23 victories in 27 starts.

If the Red Birds lose 35 of their remaining 45 conspirs, Billy Southworth would have the satisfaction of tying the 35-year-old standard set by Frank Chance's Chicago Cubs who won 116 games in 1906. Since the defending champions started on a high gear July 23, they have maintained a .852 percentage and given no signs of slackening.

Chunky Max Lanier earned his fifth shutout last night as the Cards humbled New York 7-0 for the Giants' 10th successive defeat. Lanier's 16th victory and Sewell Pyle's sixth loss with three Cub pitchers used Dave Isaacson's.

Pittsburgh stretched its break to 11 by trimming Cincinnati 7-1 in a doubleheader, 7-6 and 4-3 in 10 innings. Bob Elliott's triple scoring Vince DiMaggio with the winning run in the 10th in the first. In the second Pete Coscarart drove Nick Strincevitch in the 10th to let the rookie pitcher win his ninth.

Jim Tobin was belted for 14 blows before he gave way after a minute scoring injury but his Boston Braves outslugged Chicago, 7-5. Cincinnati and Brooklyn were rained out on a morning game.

St. Louis lengthened its American League lead to 7 games by doubling the score on the Athletics, 10-5.

Cleveland's Indians trimmed Cleveland 10-3, with Johnny Lindell's five hits showing the way. Detroit rolled into a third place tie with Detroit when the Tigers added Red Sox woes to their cup in the sixth because of rain with the count 3-3.

Hal Trosky's long outfield fly scored Guy Curtright with the only run as the Chicago White Sox blanked Washington, 1-0.

Vern Stephens, Browns—Clouted off two singles straightaway in evening with 154th homer in St. Louis' 10-5 slug-fest over Philadelphia.

Jim Tobin, Braves — Posted 12th victory although belted for 14 hits as Boston won in double, driving in two runs of Boston's 7-5 margin over Chicago.

Bill Dietrich, White Sox—Stopped Washington with five singles for 1-0 win by a 1-0 margin.

Max Lanier, Cards—Fung up fifth shutout and 16th triumph at expense of New York, 7-0.

Toronto, Aug. 18.—(CP)— It isn't every ballhawk that has a special benefit day thrown in his honor, and by some means it isn't every player who has made himself as popular as Red Kress of Toronto Maple Leafs. This Saturday afternoon at Leafs' home park will be observed as Red Kress Day, and a purse will be handed to the popular infielder and general all-round handyman.

Red has won the admiration of the fans by his ability to play practically any position on the diamond equally well. About his weakest choice is catching, but he has done that too on scattered occasions. Besides that, he is the Red coaches Leafs, which in itself makes him quite a busy man since the Torontonians have been rather disappointing this year.

Bowling Tourney Nearly Completed

Toronto, Aug. 18 (CP)—With a heavy tournament schedule set for today, last day of the Ontario Lawn Bowling Association's 11th annual championship meet, officials were cheered by clear skies. Rain previously interfered with doubles competitions, leaving the Tyrrell and Clark rinks tied in the semi-final stage.

Semi-finals in the secondary Birks-Ellis-Ryrie trophy doubles competition also were delayed until today when 100 players will go into action in the singles championship tournament.

Two rinks finals also remained to be cleared in the Birks trophy and the Toronto trophy series.

Ontario Cup runs finished up in the two major doubles competitions yesterday and today when Tyrrell, from Toronto and one from Port Colborne were set for the Townsend-Clark trophy semi-finals with Hamilton, Toronto, Oldsmen, and Wingham pairs left in the Birks-Ellis-Ryrie event.

RED DUTTON MAY DECLINE POSITION

Toronto, Aug. 18 —(CP)— The Globe and Mail says today that Mervyn (Red) Dutton soon will officially decline the presidency of the National Hockey League to which he was elected at the annual meeting of the league last spring. Dutton has been offered the N.H.L. sources as saying Dutton has decided to retire from professional hockey because of the duration because or pressure of private business.

Yesterday Dutton said he will make an announcement of his plans early next week in Montreal. He has been managing director of the Philadelphia Rockets for the February, 1942, of the late President Frank Calder.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

NO SAILOR

The boy had shown such a degree of ignorance and mental obtuseness that the teacher was disheartened, and she finally asked sarcastically: "Do you know whether George Washington was a soldier or a sailor?"

"He was a soldier, answered the urchin, promptly.

"How do you know that?" she persisted.

"Cause I saw a picture of him crossing the Delaware, an' any sailor'd know enough not to stand up in the boat."

Kingston Refuses.

Facing a possible week's lay-off in O.A.S.A. playdown circus the week after next Secretary Jim Lee of the Belleville Men's Softball League, wrote to Kingston proposing that the Belleville-Kingston O.A.S.A. series be postponed for one week. However, the Limestone City mush-ball moguls turned thumbs down on the proposition with the result the SADO "Marines" will meet the Kingston champions in the first game of a best-in-three series to open in the Limestone City on Monday. The second game will be played at the Fair Grounds in Belleville next Wednesday at 6.15 p.m. A possible third game would be played on Friday, August 29th or one week from today.

Otherwise in the O.A.S.A. circles the Belleville Squire juniors have been drawn against Hastings with the first game slated to be played here next Thursday. However, the Hastings management have asked for a 24 hour postponement, which the Squires readily agreed to as the two games are always agreeable affairs when played either here or there. Although the Squires and Hastings are always agreeable when it comes to helping each other out in the O.A.S.A. playdown tournaments the same cannot be said of the major events in the district mixed doubles. . . . "Ex ru-mored "Irish Jerry" Monahan has another of his new wrestling hold he calls the "neck whip". . . . Since Jerry is the only member of the attack Monahan has beaten such men as Yussif Hamed, Harry Eadon, Bob Wagner and others and he says the hold is fool-proof. . . . .

This And That.

Jim Tobin, the two-time no-hit pitcher of the Boston Braves, may be a great slab artist, but he is not very well thought of by newspaper photographers. . . . Recently in Chicago Tobin refused to have his picture taken and held his glove in front of his face when photographers attempted to take a shot. . . . . We know several other such quaint characters in sport and for the life of us we've never been able to understand their way of thinking. . . . You'd think they'd have enough sense to see that good publicity means more money for them in the old pay checque. . . . Bill-ie Thomas, young Ohio familiarity with cricket, became good softball player in a hurry. . . . Natural ability. . . . A group of British officers in Egypt challenged a team of colonels recently challenged an American nine of the same rank and lost it: 30-13 to the surprise of all concerned. . . . In reporting the game, Associated Press Correspondent, secretary of the Professional Golfers' Association, predicted slight golf after the war, lighting engineers are not too anxious over golf courses lighting presents many more problems than "small", says one Detroit authority. "I know of no successful experiment that has been made to date."

Remember When.

Henry Armstrong spent what was perhaps the toughest 45 minutes of his boxing career six years ago last night when he defeated Lou Ambers here for the world's lightweight boxing crown. It was Armstrong's third title victory in two months as he had previously won the bantam and featherweight crowns. Then it was eight years ago tonight since Joe Louis skyrocketed back into boxing circles by flattening Jack Sharkey in three rounds at New York. Louis won the title from Braddock. Incidentally wrestling promoter "Toots" Mondt is now matching both Sharkey and Braddock to Belleville as special attractions and wrestling fans of weekly paychecks' shows at the Hume Arena.

After over a week of idleness the Bayridge football League will commence their playdown series at the Armouries tonight, Saturday starting with SWACO and Bell Sargent tangling.

LESSON NO. 458

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Another day, another thought. You may not get it, but you ought. A fact a day and that learned well, will keep your game from going to pieces.

Step back into this deal:

NORTH
	♠ T 7 6 4 2
	♥ 8 5 4 3
	♦ T 7 5 4
	♣ 6 3
WEST	EAST
♠ K. J 9 5	♠ A 8
♥ 10 3	♥ 9 7 6
♦ J 9 8 6	♦ A 10 8 7 3 2
♣ Q J 10 8	♣ 9 7 5 4 3
SOUTH
	♠ A Q 10
	♥ A K Q J 7
	♦ A K Q
	♣ A K

The bidding has gone this far:

SOUTH	NORTH
2 H	2 NT
3 H	4 H

The two heart opening is forcing to game. The two no-trump reply is the signal for denying a sure trick. When north bids four hearts, south is not forced to bid again. Because it is a game.

However, although the obligation to bid ceases, a player is not prohibited from voluntarily bidding some more. Because a player may have higher ambitions.

South most certainly expects to make a slam. If he did not get slambitiong with a hand like that he should not wear a coat. What he needs is a cement case that will last.

Customarily, right there is where south would stick in a bid of four no-trump, the ace and king asking signal. But such a bid would be useless here. North is already known to have no ace.

So, south bids five no-trump; the signal asking for kings only. To this, north replies with a bid of six clubs; the signal for showing a hand that contains no kings.

In that way, south learns that no opponent has the spade king. It may be in the west, or, instead of a grand slam, the contract ends in six hearts.

West leads the club queen. The only safe plan in this deal is to take advantage of the automatic ruffplay that exists. Go to it.

Thunder of Guns Heard in Paris Says Nazi Radio

London, Aug. 16 (AP) — Paris is now a "front line city" and the thunder of approaching American guns can be heard in the city, the German radio said at 4 p.m. Thursday.

The German report pictured the French capital as a city of chaos without food, financial crisis or police. The Gendarmes were said to be striking.

"The churches are overcrowded, and special prayers are being said in Notre Dame," said a Transocean (propaganda) agency broadcast from Berlin.

"For the first time, the intermittent thunder of guns was heard in Paris this afternoon. The whole aspect of the French capital is assuming that of a front line city.

"For the first time the German command has appealed to the population to remain calm."

The food shortage was declared acute. The whole city was reported dependent on communality kitchens for meager meals.

Police Ignore Appeals

The striking policemen were said to have ignored appeals to return to duty. After waiting out in protest over appointment of a new high police official.

The capital was said to be without gas or coal and with electric current available only from 10.30 p.m. until midnight.

"More and more the face of the French capital is changing as it is being converted into a city close to the front," another Berlin broadcast said, "the whole of Paris (population: 2,530,766 in 1936) is walking or bicycling to work because the last traffic means now has ceased functioning.

"Up In Arms," In Color

With musical films in ever-increasing demand by the picture going public these days, timesmiths are extending themselves to turn out hit plumbers, and producers are encouraging them as never before, as exemplified by Samuel Goldwyn's preparation of songs and lyrics for his newest comedy-melody, "Up In Arms," coming to the Belle Theatre this weekend.

Samuel Goldwyn decided to have two different teams on the job, since the songs would be presented by two singers of widely differing styles.

Danny Kaye, the Broadway comedy sensation who makes his film debut in the offering, and Dinah Shore, the Tennessee torcher, are the principal vocalists in "Up In Arms," a big, uproarious musical riot about a nervous draftee and his nurse-maid, both performing under a distinctive style.

So, Harold Arlen and Ted Koehler were assigned to write the two tunes for Miss Shore, as well as a million dollar production of "Up In Arms," who in private life is Mrs. Kaye, and Max Liebman was assigned to the pair of novelty numbers that Kaye presents.

The Arlen-Koehler tunes are "How I Know" and "Tea's Torch Song," ballads keyed nicely to Miss Shore's torrid requirements, and "All Out for Freedom," which is sung by Donald Dickson and a huge soldier chorus as costume of troopers board a transport in San Francisco Bay. The "Now I Know" is one while the four principals are making a tour of Fisherman's Wharf in San Francisco just before they leave for the South Pacific, and the "Torch" tune during an entertainment given aboard the transport, with Miss Shore and Kaye presenting both numbers together in the production sequence.

Danny Kaye's first solo offering is "Manic-Depressive Picture Presents," an amazing one-man musical comedy staged in the lobby of a big New York theatre, and in which he sings all the parts of hero, heroine, villain and the entire chorus, while blending musical production numbers that have never been bidded before.

Later in the film the yellow-hatred star does the "Melody in 4-F" routine with which he stopped the show in the Broadway hoofbeat.

A cartoon and the serial "Operation America" complete the big family program.

Canadian Boys Truly Grateful For Cigarettes

"The Kinsmen Club, through the provision of Canadian cigarettes, have surely done a big job up here and we are truly grateful. Our boys are going great and we are doing our best to get this war over as soon as possible so we can return you folks at home," Staff Eddie Lee wrote in a reply to the Kinsmen "Pay Fund for Smokes" shipment of 200 cigarettes received in war-torn Normandy.

"Everything is going along according to schedule here, even the arrival of Canadian cigarettes. Our unit there aren't too many Belleville boys so I don't get around to seeing them very often, but we appreciate the cigarettes sent us," wrote J. D. Doherty, who is with the Canadian Maintenance in France.

Similar letters and postcards arrive daily at the office of Buster Lazier, chairman of the Kinsmen Fag Fund, and being mailed from practically every theatre of this globular war.

The list of Belleville boys sent individual shipments or 200 cigarettes this week by the Kinsmen included:

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R.C.A.F. in France, Aug. 16 (CP) — They had been over it often on routine patrols and special sorties but recently three Canadian Spitfire pilots went aboard for a close-up look at the Royal Navy's largest warship, H.M.S. Rodney.

As luck would have it, Sqdn. Ldr. Wally McLeod, D.F.C. and Bar, of Regina; Sqdn. Ldr. Harry Dowdong, D.F.C., of Sarnia, Ont., and Wg. Cdr. Johnny Johnson, of Toronto, were there when the, ship's mighty 16-inch guns hurled shells into German-held French territory.

"That oughta' shake 'em," commented McLeod, a top-scoring fighter pilot on current operations.

The half-ring he dropped to return to operations is back on Blair (Dall) Russell's tunic now. The young Battle of Britain veteran has been promoted to Wing Commander and leads a Canadian Spitfire wing. He is a native of Westmount, Que., holder of the D.F.C. and bar and actually is on his fourth tour of operations with five enemy destroyed to his credit. He had a ground job in England as a wing commander but took a temporary reduction in rank to come to Normandy.

How to turn a twin-engined JU88 into a glider with two quick bursts of gunfire has been demonstrated over Normandy by a top-scoring flier of the Nighthawk squadron of RCAF night fighters. In 13 nights of Run-hunting WO. Walter Kirkwood, Edmonton, (10747-104th St.) scored three individual kills with his Mosquito.

In one triumph he pounced on a JU88, picked off its port engine first and set it afire, then sent a second burst into the starboard motor. By this time the Junkers was nothing but a glider—and not for long. Engineless, "the Jerry dived with both motors blazing," hitting the ground just north of Caen, Kirkwood reported.

WO. Nell Matheson, Winnipeg (123 Garfield St.), Kirkwood's navigator, once remarked that his pilot could "shoot like Daniel Boone."

The thick brown limestone dust that has swirled upward from the Normandy airfields every time our fighters take off and land will soon, it is hoped, disappear.

Pipelines are being laid to carry water to these airfields and when it will be sprayed on the runways. The dust has been so bad that it has annoyed the fighter planes' engines and some of them have been returned to England for modifications in the air induction system.

For the second time in two days, a Spitfire pilot of Trenton, Ont., Johnny Johnson's Canadian wing has destroyed an enemy aircraft without firing a single bullet into it. This time, the feat was accomplished by Flt. Lt. D. E. Noonan, of Kingston, Ont., (146 Wellington Ave.)

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 15

But instead of Max, it was Lucia Ward who was sitting in a chair across the desk from the F.B.I. man. He appraised her coldly as soon as the agent who became had said she saw on her finger, an exact duplicate of the one the accused girl was wearing.

"You've met Miss Hallard's ring," Levering said. "Have you one like it, Miss Ward?"

"Is this a case of some sort?" Lucia demanded. "First Jeanne insists my ring is exactly like hers, and now you are insinuating the same thing. Of course, I haven't a ring like hers. Ask her —I showed her the only large ring I own."

The one she showed me was the same she heard a different design", Jeanne admitted when Levering questioned her. "But I still insist I saw a duplicate of my ring on her finger".

"I thought she was acting a bit queerly when she questioned me before", Lucia said. "Now I'm convinced of it".

Uncertain About Clyde.

So she's in it with Clyde, too, Jeanne told herself. Lucia is a traitor, too. They're made it up between them to pretend that I'm insane. The more she thought about Clyde, the more convinced she was that he was a Nazi agent. And he had the opportunity to slip the ring into Jeanne's pocket at the Norwood's dinner party.

He often was in Miss Marston's office. She saw them him use the extra typewriter there. He could very easily have been the one who wrote the letter that the F.B.I. intercepted. The fact that no one had mentioned the letter to Clyde was important or not, made no difference. He was certain, that Clyde was the man back of it. Maybe he had only merely made their own conclusions hopeless. Naturally, they would believe Clyde rather than her. He was an honored professor at the college. Who was a nobody?

Levering interrupted her thoughts by asking her again about the ring. His voice was very cold and very sharp.

Jeanne said she had nothing to hope from him. Clyde and Lucia had "proved" themselves innocent to him themselves to her.

After Lucia had been dismissed, Levering told the matron to take Jeanne and get her fingers. The girl's lawyer, he said, She was to be freed after all. Somehow the Nazi spies had convinced one of his bosses, although she knew she hadn't made a very good first impression.

The lawyer was short-lived. After a brief talk with personal belongings, he was back her to Levering's office again and left her there.

"Now would you like to go to Shelton?" asked the F.B.I. man chief asked.

"If that's nothing better", she answered. He looked at her sharply.

"Well, whether you want to or not, that's where you're going. You and I and a couple of the boys".

"You have a gun? Are you afraid?"

"Let's put it this way—we'll just say that we are making a business trip to Shelton and you decided to accompany me".

Jeanne shrugged her shoulders.

There was no choice. As she had been released, she would have re-arrested to Shelton by the first train anyway. It made little difference now that she was in town anyway. She was quite sure that Dr. Clyde would have spread the story about the coin as soon as he got back now that she knew him for what he really was.

She wondered how Miss Marston would take it? She knew that she had a Nazi agent living in her home—working in her office.

It would come as a double shock to her to know it after what Dr. Norwood had told them about the F.B.I.'s suspicions that an enemy agent was operating in the vicinity of the college. She might not even stop to think that Jeanne Clyde couldn't have been the one who sent the reports out on the office typewriter, as hadn't been Miss Hallard then.

That was the one point in her favor that she clung to with all her might. Not even Dr. Clyde with his lies and his instructions could link her with that. Nor Lucia, either.

The records were clear on her arrival by boat from New York. She could prove she had been on the Atlantic when those reports had been written, not in Shelton and the Berks.

On the train, Levering, seated beside the girl, took a sheaf of photographs from a brief case and handed them to her.

"Look through these," he suggested, "and see if you pick out anyone who resembles the man to you say gave you the envelope for Mr. Brewster."

"Who are they?" she asked.

"Never mind that —but if your story is true about the mysterious man who passed coins, you're very likely to find his photograph in that bunch there."

Jeanne sorted them over rather quickly, but could find no one who closely resembled the man she had seen on the campus. Then she examined it closely. Even putting each picture separately in a row to aside. But she couldn't find the man she was looking for.

"I'm sorry, Mr. Levering," she said, "but the man isn't there."

That's peculiar," he said, as the pictures of seven Nazi spy agents and sympathizer in this part of the country".

Jeanne's face paled. Levering played about his mouth.

Doesn't Bother Her.

"He doesn't believe me, the girl told herself. "He thinks I really am one of the gang and that I wouldn't give one of them away, even if his picture was there."

Aloud she said:

"I'm quite sure you haven't got all the Nazi spies in this bunch of pictures, Mr. Levering."

"Why do you say that?"

"Because I don't see pictures of Dr. Clyde or Lucia Ward among them."

The man laughed, shortly.

"Do you still sticking to that line, are you? And how do you figure it out Miss Ward fits into the pattern? Because of that ring story you told me?"

"That has a part of it, but not all. She is very friendly with Dr. Clyde. I know he lied about the ring, so she is guilty of something. But I must be that she is mixed up with Clyde some way."

"Your reasoning seems sound, young lady". Levering laughed. "The only trouble with it is, that you started with the wrong premise. But many old experienced detective has made that mistake. It's a very common thing to do".

"You don't believe my story about Dr. Clyde?"

"He is a very prominent man, Miss Hallard. He has a national reputation in his field. Why he has been consulted many times for the air forces. You don't imagine the army would let just any person take over such responsibilities, do you? No, you may be sure that Dr. Clyde has been cleared very closely".

"But I tell you I know—"

"If you don't mind Miss Hallard I'll do the talking that again. Not now, at any rate".

There it was, again. He so obviously disbelieving her story. He was maddening, in a way, to know the truth—to know that Dr. Clyde probably was a dangerous character—and not be able to convince anyone that she was right.

The suspicions he had voiced to Dr. Norwood about the state of her mind, seemed to be the clinching argument, not only with the college president but with Levering, too.

Couldn't they see that this was merely a dodge to shift the blame to some innocent person? Like a clever criminal Clyde had prepared his alibi in advance.

Three hours later at Shelton.

When they arrived at Shelton, Levering took Jeanne to lunch with a little party to the campus gate. Then they walked up the walk and Jeanne walked along together.

"I want you to show me the exact spot where the man accosted you, Miss Hallard", he said.

Jeanne pointed out the place as nearly as she could remember it. Then she and Levering walked back gone on, the other F.B.I. men went to the administration building and the man Marston's private office. Apparently the dean had expected them.

Miss Marston was in a frightful quandry. She had never in her life been so upset. The thought that Clyde already had been to see her and told her everything he knew about Jeanne. Everything he had not told her.

She was shocked for she had great faith in her judgment of people, and she had believed in Jeanne wholeheartedly. She wasn't ready to admit she had made a mistake.

All Daniels' calm insistance that she listen to what Jeanne had to say, the dean sank back into her chair. Her hands rubbed the smooth edge of the desk as the girl told the same story she had told Levering.

It matched Clyde's in some details, for he had carefully sprinkled half truths in his recital, only actually lying when it was necessary.

As Jeanne talked Miss Marston listened with only half of her attention. Her mind was busy with what Dr. Clyde had told her. Also she was wondering again about the incriminating letter concerning Dr. Norwood which was locked securely in her safe.

Miss Marston Confused.

Frankly she didn't know what to believe or whom to trust. In one short space of 24 hours her whole life had been shaken as it never had before.

The idea Daniels had into her mind that maybe Dr. Norwood was the guilty person. He could be the leader of the band of Nazis, as well as Clyde. To her mind either of them was capable shooting the bad known both ameer a long time. Dr. Norwood knew Max Clyde, of course.

Clyde never would have considered the possibility of the college president in the role of a conspirator if it hadn't been for the letter which had come so strangely into her hands.

The more she thought of it, the more reasonable it seemed that Norwood might have something to do with this enemy plot. He was the one who had made the arrangements for Jeanne to come to Shelton. He was the one who had fixed things so fare was advanced to bring her home from Lisbon.

How did she know that he might not have been corresponding with the girl before? That they had a secret agreement? In that case, naturally, he would not accuse someone else — she would protect herself and herself.

Shaken Confidence.

She had been shaken to the very depths by the exposure of the plan to upset the Hallard in the letter she had read. It had betrayed her years of confidence in Norwood whom she previously would have staked her life on.

The more she thought of it, the more the finger of suspicion in her mind pointed to Norwood. She didn't mention her suspicion of course, for that would have required that she produce some definite proof that he would do such a thing. There was no such proof, she believed, but she intended now to show that to anyone.

On the other hand, she couldn't believe that Dr. Clyde was a traitor, despite Jeanne's charges that knew him so well. He had always talked things over with her, frankly. He wasn't the sort of person who would ever suspect of double-dealing.

Gaps in Story.

She had only Jeanne's story to go on. Of course there were gaps in Clyde's story as she could see them, now that the girl pointed them out, but she was certain that he could explain them satisfactorily when she had a chance to talk with him.

How about Jeanne? How well did she know her? Had she thought she knew her very well, she considered herself a very good judge of girls She had known so many thousands of girls in her years of teaching. She had been at the college.

Miss Marston was positive she could tell an honorable girl from a dishonest one after she had talked with her for a short time. There were certain unmistakable signs — little things that gave unconscious clews to a person's character. Those signs she had learned to recognize at a glance, and if she were in doubt, a few questions always put her on the right track.

She had become very fond of Jeanne since she had known her. Before all these charges and complications had arisen to darken her she would have sworn that the girl was exactly what she seemed to be. But she had been mistaken about her.

Jeanne said she was not Jeanne Hallard at all, but a Vera Taylor who had been in California. If she had been so taken in that she didn't know that girl wasn't exactly what she seemed, it was possible that Clyde's intuition had failed her about whether Jeanne was telling the truth.

If only I hadn't got that letter, she mourned to herself.

At any rate, she thought, gratefully, very few people know anything about the case. It had been kept out of the papers. No one's reputation had been damaged yet, publicly.

"I can see you don't believe me, Miss Marston," Jeanne broke in on her thoughts.

Pleased with the necessity for a direct answer, the dean hesitated. "Well—" she said.

"There is only one way I can think of to break through the wall of alibis and the armor of respectability of our famous Dr. Clyde," the girl said bitterly.

"How's that?" Daniels asked.

"The only way I can think of to do it through Kay Roberts."

She had to explain to him about Kay, and her love for Clyde. Then she turned to Miss Marston.

"You can help, Miss Marston, if you will."

"I'll do anything to clear up this mess," the woman said. "What do you want?"

Try a Trick.

"It isn't much—but really is a trick in favor. My idea is that if Kay believes I am engaged to Dr. Clyde, she may become so angry that she will turn on him and tell what she knows in sum she must know some incriminating thing about him. That is, of course, if Dr. Clyde really is the traitor."

Miss Marston looked puzzled.

"What I'd like to have you do is to go into Dr. Norwood's office and telephone Miss Roberts. Say that Dr. Clyde and I are to be married this afternoon."

"Are you?" the woman demanded, aghast.

"Of course not. But if Kay thinks she's lost him, she may break out with something that will help confirm my belief that he is the traitor. If so, I'm looking for."

Miss Marston reluctantly agreed to the plan after Mr. Daniels told her he thought it would be all right. She looked ten years older as she walked across the hall to Norwood's office.

Mr. Daniels had followed Miss Marston outside to watch to which he placed in the corridor. Apparently, his orders were to keep Jeanne under observation.

The girl was alone in the office when the dean returned.

"Did she blow up?" Jeanne inquired eagerly. "Did she say anything about Clyde?"

"Well, no, Jeanne, she didn't. I'm sorry to disappoint you. She took the announcement very well."

Jeanne looked at her in disappointment. She had banked on her ability to throw off her guard and make her blurt out something about Clyde that would confirm her suspicions of him. Either the girl was too smart, or Clyde had warned her to keep her mouth shut under all circumstances.

She had anticipated an explosion from the news. Kay was the kind of girl that flared up easily, and she had expected her to do so at Miss Marston's announcement.

Little Benny's Note Book

Mr. and Mrs. Hinway were suppose to come and play bridge with pop and ma, and we were eating supper and ma said, The Hinways play a good sound game of bridge, but they're like the proverbial 3 fat roses of summer, I mean they never know when to go home. They just sit there calculating their income till the clock strikes all hours. Oh well, I guess they're company, but people seldom do, she said.

My little letter was right at the right time might do the trick, pop said. For instants I might casuall say, Well mom, we had a very nice game and I'm glad you're home, or I'm sorry you lost, as the case might be, and now any time you want to go home These days we dispense on ceremony, we'll understand, he said, and ma said, Can't you think of anything more sutile than that for land sake?

Well, suppose you call them up and ask them what night we made the date for, and when they remind you it's tonight you say, Oh dear how stupid of me to forget, oh well, please come over anyway, I assure you it's nothing very important. How's that for sutile? he said, and ma said, That's about as sutile as a barn door, I'm afraid, dear.

Well, then I'll start to yawn, pop said. I'll keep on yawning and yawning for a long time, and I'll tell them the best yawn specialist in town is working on the case, and they won't quite know whether to believe me or not, so they'll go home on general principles without any definite hard feelings, pop said.

The feeling in me said they would just have to politely trust to luck as usual and Mr. and Mrs. Hinway came, and I, went to bed and woke up once and the clock was striking twelve and they were still down there talking, proving the luck wasn't very good.

CANADA'S NAVY

In 1939 — 15 SHIPS

In 1944 — 650 SHIPS

THAT'S WHY GASOLINE IS SHORT!

WITH more than 43 times as many warships as in pre-war years . . . with naval needs for fuel-oil and other petroleum products increased more than 2300% over 1939 requirements . . . with more and faster ships patrolling the seas—the wartime oil consumption of Canada's Navy has far outstripped anticipated demand.

Canada now has her own "fast-nose", providing air cover for convoys. She has swarms of nimble anti-submarine craft that circle slow-moving cargo boats—often travelling twice as far each trip as the merchantmen they are protecting. She must re-fuel numbers of Allied ships while they call at Canadian ports.

All the fuel oil for these naval enterprises—together with all the gasoline and other petroleum products needed by Canada's Army, Air Force, war industry, agriculture and essential transportation and civilian use—must come from one common petroleum pool. If our fighting men are not to go short . . . if our limited supplies are not to be spread dangerously thin in places where they are urgently needed—then the more fuel we must save as little from the pool as possible.

Remember, the equivalent of 6 gallons out of every 10 gallons of gasoline used in Canada come by ocean tanker. We are not self-supporting for oil and every gallon we use needlessly or wastefully not only robs Allied sailors, soldiers and airmen of "fighting" gas and fuel oil—but diverts precious tanker transportation. Remember this. Remember—petroleum powers the attack—not 4 drop must be wasted.

LESS CIVILIAN GAS MEANS MORE "FIGHTING GAS" FOR THE FORCES

Answering YOUR QUESTIONS about the GASOLINE SHORTAGE

How much fuel oil is needed for one fueling of a battleship? . . . Enough to heat an average home 350 years. Is this fuel oil similar to that used for heating public buildings? . . . Yes. How much gasoline is needed to keep a fast Navy plane in the air for one hour? . . . The equivalent of that needed for an automobile trip from Montreal to Calgary. Do the majority of Canada's Naval ships burn oil? . . . Yes, they all do.

ALLIES CONTINUE PURSUIT OF HUN ARMIES AMERICANS BESIEGE NAVAL BASE OF TOULON

Germans Fleeing North Toward Bridgeless Seine

British Only 17 Miles From Le Havre by Water

By WES GALLAGHER
(A. P. War Correspondent)

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 19. ((CP)—American armored columns have driven to within 17 miles west of Dreux within less than five miles of the Seine River at Mantes-Gassicourt.

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 19 (AP) — The western front battle for France reached its last stage today—pursuit and annihilation of one German army and part of another fleeing northward toward Rouen and the almost bridgeless Seine.

Allied air forces reported the destruction of 1,300 enemy vehicles forced onto roads in daytime in an effort to destroy the German columns which were coming under the most terrific bombardment any battlefield ever has seen.

There was no further word on the progress of the American 3rd. Army other than yesterday's report by the German that Patton's troops fighting 12 miles from the city. But it was announced at headquarters that American armored patrols had pushed out from Dreux, Chartres and Orleans, ring of cities south and west of Paris—and in some cases had withdrawn.

Canadians Thrust Forward

Meanwhile the 21st Army Group, containing the Canadian 1st Army on a front extending from the coast east of the Seine to the Falaise area. It was disclosed yesterday that Belgian and British troops are moving with the 1st. Canadian Army, which also includes British and Canadian troops.

British forces pushed northeast of fallen German rocket-the outskirts of Caboung and Dives-Sur-Mer and an area some 12 miles northeast of Caen. They were only 17 miles south of Le Havre by sea but separated from it by the wide estuary of the Seine River.

This was the battle situation today along the Normandy coast east of the Orne River since D-Day.

A senior British staff officer at the front predicted that Field Marshal Von Kluge's battered 7th. Army reinforced by parts of the 15th. Army would not cross the Seine River but would fall back even farther to the north.

British 2nd. Army troops captured elements of 18 German divisions yesterday. Germans still caught in the Normandy trap were declared to be in a state of confusion because eastward.

Enemy forces found them-selves from the pocket struggled northward toward the Seine after Lt.-Gen. Patton's 3rd. Army forces virtually had denied them any chance of escape by the lower Seine.

The supreme command said there would be a temporary blackout of news in some sectors, since the German radio was in a state of confusion they did not know where the Allied troops were and any announcement by the enemy upon which they could hear by radio would help them.

While the American 3rd. Army held the Germans pocketed with-in an 80-mile wall of armor stretching from a point near Argentan to Dreux, British, American, Canadian, Polish, Dutch and Belgian forces drove the Germans in a confused mass toward the Seine River.

Speed Quickened

This struggling German force was estimated at 40,000 to 100,000 men. It included parts of 18 divisions. Seventy 7th. Army, but also mauled elements battered in the northern half of Von Kluge's crack 15th. Army, revealed yesterday to have been cut off from Northern France where it had been assigned to defend the Pas-de-Calais coast. A British staff officer said the offensive power of these troops was broken, he added that in winning the battle of Normandy the Allies will have won the battle of France.

In France, Gen. Eisenhower confirmed with his highest officers what was believed to have reached far-reaching decisions as a result of the new turn of the battle.

During an R.A.F. air bombardment north of Trun yesterday one great mass of vehicles was turned into a flaming, bloody mass of tanks, trucks and men. R.A.F. veterans of the North African campaign described the attacks on the fleeing Germans as the greatest show "since El Alamein" which spelled Marshal Erwin Rommel's doom in Africa.

Reinforcements

(The German Transocean agency, broadcasting from Berlin, recorded a German war ministry official statement as saying "we must be prepared for a German withdrawal from France."

(The same agency quoted a military spokesman in Berlin as saying that "no fresh German divisions can be sent to France. The troops in battle have been warned of this and have been ordered to fight to the last man.")

Headquarters was silent yesterday regarding the movement of Third Army units on Paris but confirmed the capture of Authon, 20 miles southwest of Paris. It said it was unable to confirm earlier reports that the Americans were near Versailles, seven miles outside Paris.

Headquarters said last night the Falaise-Argentan gap in Normandy now had been narrowed to two miles. A front line broadcast said the gap had been almost closed entirely around Trun, southeast of Falaise.

The pocket already had dwindled to such insignificance, however, that great forces of British and Canadian troops were released and were driving straight east after the enemy.

Hamilton Regt. Improvises Attack To Take Norman Town of Verrieres

By LOUIS V. HUNTER
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 4th Canadian Armd. Div. in France, Aug. 19. (CP) The Tilleys, so called from the letters R.H.L.I. on their shoulder flashes, the 1st Infantry Battalion of the Royal Hamilton Light Infantry, captured the Canadians' end-of-July offensive in a manner which is as improvised as because the original plan could not be carried out.

It was a preliminary operation the night before D-Day of July 25, the Tilleys had to secure their end of the Troteval farm, about a mile north of Verrieres, and assist in securing the Riley's starting line in that area. But the Canadians found the German tanks sitting on the west end of the starting line and the Rileys had to secure their own starting line. This had to be done because the lack of artillery because location of the Quebec troops was not known.

At four a.m. July 25, the R.H.L.I. crossed the starting line, advancing through the cornfield in artillery. Heavy machine-gun fire from three sides laced the Rileys as they moved in the open. One company managed to get to the farm house about 200 yards north of the town and hand-to-hand fighting took place before the machine-guns in the area were silenced.

The company continued into the village and started clearing the houses. They encountered more opposition from the intense fire coming up from the south to join the town and assist in clearing it.

Seventeen-pounder guns knocked out four of a number of enemy tanks which had been firing on the troops from one bank and medium artillery fire reduced machine-gun opposition in hedges on the right flank. British tanks and supporting Canadian arms which were moving forward ran into a minefield and some vehicles were blown up.

Nevertheless, before the inevitable counter-attack was put in by the Germans, the Rileys organized some of their anti-tank guns in position. They had been on their objective only 20 minutes when nine German tanks advanced. They opened fire shooting up two forward guns and gun tower but were driven off by the infantry with Piats, grenades and smoke.

In a man-versus-tank engagement, the Rileys destroyed one tank with a Piat attacked two enemy tanks which passed through their position. While his platoon commanders were pinned in slit trenches, Lt. Bill Hobson, 24, of Hamilton, Ont., and Lt. Jeffrey Winnipeg; Les Fusiliers ; Montreal, Montreal, South Saskatchewan Regiment, Weyburn, Sask., and the North Canadian Army Tank Battalion from Calgary, 7th division's commander, Maj.-Gen. J. H. Roberts, led the counter-attacks.

Now, easy to avenge the men who fell two years ago today to prove that enemy beaches can be stormed, a reconstructed 2nd Canadian Division is fighting in France as part of the 1st Canadian Army. From Palaise, near the southern end of the Canadian sector of the Allied line, to Dieppe is little more than 75 miles in a northeasterly direction.

It is conceivable that as the enemy falls back to the Seine and the River in his disorganized retreat the Allies may attempt to encircle the German 15th Army guarding the Pas de Calais area and the blood-bomb coast, swinging east and north like a gigantic scythe. If successful, that move would force the fall of Dieppe.

No greater honor could be paid to the men of the 2nd Division than that they should be the first to enter storied Dieppe.

REDS ENDANGER 3 NAZI DIVISIONS BEYOND VISTULA

Retreating Eastern Armies Are Reported Trapped North Of Sandomierz

COUNTER-BLOW FAILS

By EDDY GILMORE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)
Moscow, Aug. 19 (CP)—Three of Hitler's retreating eastern front divisions, possibly 30,000 men, were reported trapped today north of Sandomierz by the Russian bulge, which now has fallen before the Red army.

The German attempt to halt an imminent Soviet sweep into East Prussia and Germany proper died in their biggest armored blows in months west of the Lithuanian city on Siauliai. They penetrated the Red army lines, first apparently it was a local relieving set-back.

East of the Warsaw suburb of Praga the Red Army attacked and improved its positions.

The Russian communique was silent on fighting at the border of East Prussia, but first reports indicated the Soviets repulsed villages inside the Junker province burning from Nazi-spelled torches.

(Moscow broadcasts heard in London said the Russians had reached the East Prussian border at new but unspecified points. Fighting at the borders of East Prussia grows fiercer every hour ; but the assaults of the Red Army massive never slackens, one Moscow announcer asserted.

(Berlin reported the Russians had thrown more than 150,000 men into the battle for East Prussia in the 80-mile front, the largest invasion in Northern Poland to the Niemen River in Western Lithuania. They said heavy fighting was in progress, with the "centre of gravity" at Virbalis, three miles from the border on the Kaunas-Konigsberg highway.

Marshal Ivan S. Konev, commander of the 1st Ukraine Army group, reported his troops driving into the Radom region, taking numerous villages along the Vistula.

As infantry and armored columns smash their way inland and firmly establish beachheads in Southern France, British and American paratroopers are reported to be digging behind the enemy strong-points and shooting Nazi attempts to rush up reserves of troops and supplies. Meanwhile, U. S. and French forces continue to pour ashore in an unending stream to join the battle for Toulon and Cannes, reinforcing the thousands of men who have already landed.

2NDCANADIANDIV. TAKES VENGEANCE FOR DIEPPE

Without Attack No Invasion of France Could Have Taken Place on June 6

LESSONS LEARNED

By E. J. ANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The dead lie in bleak graves. The wounded hobble and grope ... nameless men behind wire awaiting deliverance. But today, two years after, out of the heartbreak and shambles, the 2nd Canadian Division is wreaking vengeance for Dieppe. Soon, the man of the 2nd division may be in Dieppe.

Without Dieppe—officially, a "reconnaissance in force—there could have been no invasion of France last June 6. That frontal attack on well-emplaced, fixed enemy fortifications proved many things: that hidden, heavy guns must be silenced by vertical assault; that given air cover, warships can approach close to an enemy beach; that beach wire and underwater obstructions can be breached.

It was tragic—at heavy price.

Of the 5,000 men of the 2nd Canadian Division who participated in the fierce, nine-hour assault on the heavily defended town nestling at the English channel Aug. 19, 1942 two-thirds were casualties 3,350 dead, wounded or prisoner or missing. The Canadians were flanked by British commandos. American Rangers and fighting French units who also suffered heavily. Regiments Participate

The Canadian regiments participating were the Royal Regiment of Canada, from Toronto; Royal Hamilton Light Infantry (Wentworth Regiment), Hamilton, Ont.; Essex Scottish Regiment, Windsor, Ont.; Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, Winnipeg; Les Fusiliers ; Montreal, Montreal, South Saskatchewan Regiment, Weyburn, Sask., and the North Canadian Army Tank Battalion from Calgary, 7th division's commander, Maj.-Gen. J. H. Roberts, led the counter-attacks.

Now, easy to avenge the men who fell two years ago today to prove that enemy beaches can be stormed, a reconstructed 2nd Canadian Division is fighting in France as part of the 1st Canadian Army. From Palaise, near the southern end of the Canadian sector of the Allied line, to Dieppe is little more than 75 miles in a northeasterly direction.

UNITED STATES REMOVES EXPORT BANS ON TURKEY

Facilitating Shipment of Civilian Goods on Cash Basis

RENEW MILITARY AID

Washington, Aug. 19 (AP)—The United States has removed export bans imposed on Turkey during the war, facilitating the shipment of civilian goods on a cash basis to the neutral which today relations with Germany two weeks ago.

It was also learned today that shipment of military items under lend-lease is expected to be resumed shortly, depending on the Allied supply situation as a result of the French campaigns.

The majority of lend-lease sent to Turkey of British origin, but the decision to start shipments is up to the combined Munitions Assignments Board.

Britain and the United States stopped sending military aid to Turkey several months ago after negotiations between British and Turkish military delegations broke down.

The American Ambassador to Ankara, Laurence Steinhardt, who has been in this country about a month, is returning today.

The exact of lend-lease accorded Turkey will depend on whether or not that neutral comes into the war. Basing their predictions on the rapid progress of Allied drives in France and the western push of the Red army, observers here were inclined to discount the possibility that Turkey would become an active belligerent.

Petain's Govt. Leaving Vichy

London, Aug. 19 (CP)—Marshal Petain's government is moving from Vichy to an unidentified new capital, a Berlin broadcast said today in reporting that an American tank spearhead was fighting in Germany 1,000 miles south of Paris.

A German foreign office spokesman was quoted as saying Pierre Laval already had fled Paris.

No hint was given of the nearness of the Allied tanks—presumably a part of the American 3rd army —as they were identified as "reconnaissance" armor

PORT OF BREMEN, OTHER TARGETS HEAVILY POUNDED

Mosquitos Dump Two-Ton Blockbusters On Berlin For Fourth Time in Five Nights

TROOPS STRAFED

London, Aug. 19 —(CP)— Allied airmen who destroyed or damaged more than 3,800 vehicles in blistering attacks on the fleeing enemy in northwest France yesterday, continued their assault on Field Marshal Kluge's shattered divisions today after a night in which more than 1,000 R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. heavyweights smashed at the great industrial city of Bremen and other targets.

As the four-engined night raiders lashed at widespread objectives in three countries, Mosquitos dumped two-ton block-busters on Berlin for the fourth time in five nights and kept the non-stop offensive against the retreating remnants of the German 7th Army rolling throughout the night.

Other targets of the night fleets were a chemical oil plant at Sterkrade-Holten in the Ruhr, oil storage depots in Belgium, the rail centre of Connantre, 90 miles east of Paris, and flying bomb sites in northern France.

Sterkrade-Holten is ranked as among the six largest synthetic oil plant in the Ruhr.

Canadians There In Attack.

The Canadian bomber group shared in the attack on the great port of Bremen. The operation marked the 2,000th sortie of the Canadian bomber command since Wing Cmdr. A. G. Uli of Ottawa. This operation was celebrated by dropping a bomb marked "Hitler's Hunters" from a plane flown by A. C. Carter of Regina.

An Air Ministry communique said the night operations cost four aircraft.

Bremen and other objectives in northwest Germany also were hit during the night and mines were laid in many waters.

The Air Ministry said R.A.F. Lancaster and Halifax bombers yesterday with fighter escort smashed at the Luftwaffe transport depot at L'Isle Adam just north of Paris and several flying bomb installations in Northern France which four bombers were missing. Eighteen fighters and fighter-bombers were destroyed over the English Channel and the Continent in combat against the reeling foe in France.

WOMEN TOO CURIOUS

Houston, Tex., Aug. 19 (AP). Two inquisitive women shoppers were wishing today they hadn't been so curious. Noting that a crowding policeman had stopped a woman in the middle of a downtown street, Mrs. Ethel Cunningham and Mrs. Dora Draguignan and St. Raphael on the coast, American troop units were reported shelling Le Muy.

Headquarters announced capture of Draguignan, rail junction 28 miles to the east, yesterday, and 48 hours. He was taken yesterday by troops of the American 36th

Typhoons Unleash Mighty Air Blitz Against Remnants of Hun 7th Army

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the 1st Canadian Army in France, Aug. 19 (Cable) — The battle of Normandy is won and a great Allied victory is assured with its follow, said higher Allied officer here today. Only mopping-up remains while Allied planes maintained their smashing attack on battered enemy forces streaming north in the pocket east of Falaise and Argentan.

He said yesterday it would be a battle against German demolitions and booby traps designed to slow down the Allied forces. Any other battle was impossible because of beyond German means.

While the officers quizzed military situation, rocket-firing Typhoons and bomb-carrying fighters and Mustangs throughout yesterday flew over the 1st Canadian army area carrying out the dramatic tactical air blitz in history against the Germans. The assault continued through yesterday evening and during the night.

Used to Flag Holes.

The officer said the Germans originally had a sizeable army fleeing the Seine river, but almost two-thirds of its strength is believed to have been destroyed in attempts to plug holes in the Normandy front as the German 7th army disintegrated. Originally forming round the Allied bridgehead—the Falaise-Argentan gap—the Allied armies.

The officer said the Germans misjudged Allied intentions when they kept forces along the coast beyond the Seine, expecting a second landing there. They dribbled these forces in piecemeal reinforcements of Normandy, which over a long period had 37 divisions in it. He pointed that it no-longer constituted an army strong enough to withstand the approach of Allied forces.

He added that the Germans while fighting in the Normandy pocket west of Falaise and Argentan, overlooked the strength of the 1st Canadian army's attack from the north.

Military authorities here think that the Germans' power in western Europe to build a new line that cannot be outflanked is gone. It is believed their power to resist effectively anywhere else along the western front also is finished.

Advance Column Only Six Miles From Great Port

Beachhead Now Enlarged To 1,000 Square Miles

Rome, Aug. 19 (AP)—American 7th Army forces have driven to Roquebrussanne 14 miles north of Toulon, in an inland flanking thrust, and other forces have driven to within six miles of that major French naval base, Allied headquarters announced today.

Still another column drove deeper into the interior of southern France and occupied Salernes, 12 miles north-west of Draguignan and more than 30 miles inland from the landing beaches.

The beachhead has been enlarged to more than 1,000 square miles, and German resistance remains light, headquarters announced.

Fwr M. T. B. Sunk

"A naval announcement said four German motor torpedo boats were sunk during an attempted attack on Allied ships.

An official announcement said one of Msl.-Gen. Alexander Mc-Carrell's columns moved into the vicinity of Solliès Pont, six miles northeast of the Mediterranean port, while another plunged to the Brignoles area, 20 miles north, in the outflanking drive.

The German garrison sought to step up its resistance by moving the guns of the sunken French battleship Strasbourg but American medium bombers hit and set fire to the vessel yesterday and may have destroyed the weapons. The 26,500 ton Strasbourg was scuttled at Toulon when the French fleet sailed their own fleet at Toulon.

The RNC quoted one of its correspondents Saturday morning as saying that Toulon is going to be a big battle. "German have thrown up a hastily built screen of mobile guns and infantry to give protection to the rest of their men as they pulled out of the city," said the correspondent. Vaugh Thomas. "They are blowing up bridges and mining the roads, not on a scale big enough to check our advance."

Advance Toward Marseille.

The advance of Brigadier Following Gen. Sevez's troops up the Rhone valley north of Marseille. Such an advance, if projected beyond Lyon, would bring the German forces in both Marseille and Toulon.

Toward the eastern end of the beachhead, forces advanced in slight advances in the vicinity of Draguignan, captured inland road junction point, and Le Muy, patch said German forces still occupied Draguignan and St. Raphael on the coast. American troop units were reported shelling Le Muy.

Headquarters announced capture of Draguignan, rail junction 28 miles to the east, yesterday, and 48 hours. He was taken yesterday by troops of the American 36th

30,000 Germans Reported Digging Trenches in Paris

New York, Aug. 19 —(AP)— Thirty thousand German soldiers are digging trenches in Paris and fortifying the suburbs, the Swiss newspaper Die Illustrierte of Lucerne said in an article reported today by the office of war information.

A special effort has been made in the construction of fortified buildings occupied by Nazi civil and military offices, the article said, and tank traps have been installed at the ends of important streets.

The German occupation authorities do not want to "spare Paris the horrors of a siege or pitched battle," the article declared.

Italian Front Remains Quiet

Rome, Aug. 19—(AP)—The Italian front remained relatively quiet today with the last snipers cleaned up in the central part of Florence.

There was sporadic fire along the Arno River and some enemy patrols were repulsed. Allied patrols carried out a reconnaissance in the upper Arno valley and in the Adriatic sector.

Heavy rains fell along the front, hampering operations.

Meanwhile material necessary to crack the Gothic Line and open the Po Valley to Italy was being prepared.

Field Marshal Kesselring, who now has the equivalent of perhaps 20 divisions in Italy, now has the equivalent of perhaps 20 divisions, is cut off or very nearly cut off from France by the new Allied southern blitz, side of the landing there, he now faces the grim possibilities of a knock-down fight in and behind the Gothic Line, a cold winter in the alps, or a difficult retreat in the Vienna direction.

French Underground Sabotaged Nazi Div. In D-Day Operations

Edmonton, Aug. 19.—(CP)—The French underground, under the command of Gen. Joseph Koenig, stopped "one full German division" by sabotage on D-Day, Maj. M. De-Machelon, French officer escaped from France, said in an interview here tonight.

Just arrived from Wainwright, approximately 197 miles east of Edmonton, Maj. De Machelon said French people are "waiting patiently for the day of liberation".

En route to Ottawa, where he is stationed, Maj. De Machelon stepped off in Edmonton overnight after a three-day visit to Wainwright. He said he was born in France and seven other military attaches were also present in full-scale manoeuvres staged by Canadian troops on the 1,239-square-mile area set out recently by Canadian military authorities.

Point Traverse

Strenuous Efforts Save House, Barn

Point Traverse, (Special) — The prompt action of Point Traverse firemen and R.A.F. airmen saved the barn and farmhouse on the Lot 16 district property of destruction by a serious grass fire which burnt over several acres of land on this point yesterday. The fire which started from practice shooting on No. 3 range here, ignited the grass and swept over the acres, with such rapidity that some three hundred men and two fire engines from the Picton Air Station were summoned to the scene. Miles of fences were destroyed, as well as valuable timber. The contents of both barn and house were moved to safety, while commercial fishermen and neighbors assisted in keeping the flames away from the buildings. Previous grass fires have burned over a large area, but this violently destroying much pasture land and timber.

Rope Parted--So Did Clubs

"It's mutiny" bellowed President Matt (Lone Ranger) Currie of the Kinsmen Klut-ups.

"Sabotage" intoned Ted (The Voice—big type please) Schwab, of the Kiwanis Kewpies, hoping that Montreal press photographers were in the vicinity.

"Pure Accident", murmured President Pink (Peerless) Pinkston, of the Rotary Rookies, that with a gleam of suspicion in his eye). And the guy in the grey suit, hitched up his pants, took a reef in two of his chins, warded off verbal tommy guns, howitzers, ducked two Kiwanis chickens, which he later found in one pocket, and spent the rest of the evening trying to explain that he did not fill column, the rope-pulling stalwarts.

It all happened when the rope used by the Kiwanis-Kinsmen tug-of-war teams snapped asunder at approximately forty-five seconds, of trying to settle an argument between the squads at the Kinsmen Karnival last night.

The draw ended in a draw. It proved that the middle can be beat-

Kiwanis Karnival, One of Best In History, Has Ended

The Belleville Kiwanis Club knew what it was doing when it made the Weslemroan an honorary member of the organization, for Friday night he came through with an outstanding basketball, that he himself set the perfect. And with it, the Kiwanis ring finished the most successful Karnival ever held under the aegis of the local service organization.

Concerted efforts of Karnival chairmen the wisest possible choice of the general public of a function, that succeeded in it, and behind it all, sincere city and district approval of the fine community work being done by President Jack McVeigh and his Kiwanis members, combined to make the 1944 edition of this kind of open air entertainment a splendid financial success.

The last night of the four-day show was by no means the least. There was no let-down in the entertainment offered the public. In fact it could be said, that from an entertainment point of view, it was the best night of the four.

Chairman Ralph Wallis, and Master of Ceremonies Schwab, spared no effort to make the stage show an outstanding affair, Crowds numbering thousands again jammed the Bridge-Front Street "antiphlebatic" and were well rewarded for their visit. The Bully Ballet was some.

Smart Ventriloquist Act,

Versatility of Danny "Boy" Smith local entertainer, was seen in a smart vaudeville act, with his stooge "Joe McCarthy" providing a lot of amusement.

Seven-year-old Marie Nash with voice and guitar turned in a smart performance, while Les Duby lad's fine soprano voice was heard again and much enjoyed. "Sweethearts of Belleville" Miss Ethel Smith delighted the large audience with a group of popular numbers, with William Navin at the piano.

The versatile Grant family, Mr. and Mrs. William Grant and eleven year-old Helen delighted the large audience with their musical ability. Mr. Grant an expert xylophonist offered a fine "Chopsticks" and later played a duet with his clever daughter, who also is a musician of more than passing ability. Mrs. Grant accompanied the family duo, at the piano.

The Dancing Donovans Corbyville's contribution to the field of entertainment drew the applause of the crowd with a Japanese dance. In costume, the youngsters went through their routine with the ease of veterans.

Fitting Climax

Corporal A. Bell and his pretty sister Gisale, slack wire artists rounded out a stage entertainment, that was enjoyable as it was varied, and one that was a fitting climax to the out-door offerings of the Karnival Stage Program committee.

Preceding the stage show members of the Kinsmen and Kinsmen Clubs provided a lot of amusement when they attempted a tug-

A Letter With a Smile.

Doc Trueheit has hung along a poster picturing a Canadian soldier a smile illuminating his face, sitting on the steps of a ruined church, reading a letter from home. The poster carries a theme that should be read by all who have friends or relatives at the front.

"That smile of his," it reads, "is a recipe for victory."

Contentment, confidence, and high spirits blow from the face of this Canadian soldier in France—all the result of that cheerful letter from home.

Thousands of war zone scenes like this could be photographed after each distribution of the mails. The picture speaks for itself—tells better than words that, for a few blissful moments, he is reunited with "somebody" 3,000 miles distant who has not forgotten to write.

Nothing can take the place of a letter like this. In keeping a fighting man healthful, or giving him hope and confidence when he is lying wounded in hospital".

For Parcel-Packin' Mammas, Sweethearts and Wives of ...

Now that the boys are fighting in countries somewhat different to the Tight Little Island, they are looking forward to their parcels with as much if not more enthusiasm as they did while fighting in Britain. Not much change has taken place in the contents of parcel being sent from Canada to the boys overseas, but a little variety, now that they are in Sunny Italy and of view, fruit and agnorinas and France, home of vin blink, pomme de terre and the spud, (potatoes and eggs) may not come amiss.

For instance, in England, the lads with a yen for cheese saw as much of their favorite food as a Nazi in a German cathedral. Now that they are in a land of milk and "honey" their appetites may be satiated a bit.

There is fruit in Italy, and you can forget sending the boys the juices as before.

This, at least, has been the observation of a local war mother, and her friends who send overseas parcels regularly. Her son is a Sergeant veteran and has been overseas long enough (three years) to give her an excellent idea of what servicemen require.

"As much as possible, we send things to the boys in tins to avoid spoiling. Things like fruit cake can be sealed in tins with wax or cardboard brown paper. Cans of honey are also sealed in tins with wax or cotton.

A returning soldier told her that soap was one thing overseas men got from him. "He is all right to pack soap in a parcel as long as everything else is sealed", she said. "Another returning boy said it was a good idea to include a pocket-size book in the parcels. He said they were handed around the camp until they fell to pieces". Every one reads them from cover to cover.

A Post Office official pointed out that packaging requirements were no different for France and Italy than for England.

"All parcels go to our Canadian Postal Corps in England, where records of the whereabouts of Canadian troops are listed", he explained. "After a breakdown in England, parcels are forwarded to the CPC men who follow the boys and have the latest information on where they are".

The post office reiterates that overseas parcels should be securely packed in corrugated cardboard boxes. There should also be no glass jars, matches, perishable goods or inflammable materials.

Things We Forget for France.

Things not to forget for France, then, are canned fruits and fruit juices, soap and s's, pocketsize book in addition to the annual items. For Italy, fruits and fruit juices can be forgotten through the summer months at least.

And, spice permits, sun glasses tins of soap and hair oil will bring delight to any serviceman. Some of them, too, have written home that they could use a tiny kerosene stove with which to warm up food.

Young Salt Home on Furlough.

Youthful veteran of the war-swept high seas, twenty-year-old Stoker Charles Arnold Clarke, son of Mr and Mrs. Herbert Diamond, Pastor Avenue, will arrive home shortly on a long-awaited furlough. His ship, the battle-scarred frigate H.M.C.S. Huron is now in a Canadian port and members of her crew have been given leave.

From the Murmansk convoy route to the flanks of the invasion the gallant little ship and her valiant crew have seen plenty of action. Several narrow escapes of the enemy hang to her fighting figurative belt. She and two of Jerry's gallantly nurtured destroyers and dangled other vessels while limiting in the channel. She was in at the kill of the Scharnhorst, while guarding a convoy that the big Nazi ship had apparently set out to destroy.

She did valiant service on D-Day and has been doing it since. Now she is in port for a well-deserved rest.

Young Diamond has seen plenty of service, not only on board the "Huron" but the corvette "Kenora" as well. He did patrol duty along the Canadian-Newfoundland coast to further naval adventures overseas.

Relishing two and one-half years ago, he went to the Galt Naval Training Depot as an R.L.A., course, and he later transferred to Hamilton where he trained as a stoker. Going to sea shortly afterward, he has seen plenty of the world as well as action against the common foe.

A younger brother Jack is also in the navy. He is slightly past eighteen years of age and six weeks ago went to England where at present he is attached to the Royal Navy Training Instruction in gunnery. He will likely be posted to one of the big "battle-wagons" of the British Fleet, upon completion of training.

Accepting to the Gesserine.

Ken Holmes, former adjutant of the Argyll, writes to inform us he is now in Sicily, in the action of which ... Has a travelling job down Winnipeg-Lumsden way, where he can slip across the border to the "Bread Rail" and meet up with the "Gesserine" without leaving on permit. ... Ken, sends his best to his former ... and to his old regiment .... "Stew" McBride is expected home shortly. He landed in Halifax yesterday from the "Lady Nelson" along with other wounded heroes of the Canadian armed services .... Petty Officer Rob Jones, home from the east coast on a twenty-eight ... CPO Bill Hirst is expected ditto in the near future ... Major Bev Fairman is doing well in Italy, and hopes to be in Blighty shortly .... It couldn't be that Bv. and his gunners are taking the short cut to look up with the boys in the land of chianti, macaroni and vin blink .... Doug. Disher, formerly of the salt of the Navy will be home within a day or so, if he hasn't sampled the paternal groceries already .... Brother Jack is "over 'ome" getting acclimatized to the ways and nanneristics of the Grand Fleet .... He'll be heard from later .... Correction — last week we reported two of the Bailey boys as being in Canada .... Two wrong ... Carl and Barnet are in England, while Burton is holding down a job in the Pay Office in Kingston .... The GWSP sends its best wishes to all and sundry .... Over in Sunny Italy, their husky proteges of an anti aircraft battery are playing volley-ball with the gifts sent them by the local lassies .... They are doing a swell job .... And now, if some up-and-coming organization wants to do likewise, how about taking over the lads of the 36th Battery now in France .... They are more or less Belleville boys and would appreciate the sponsorship of some local group .... Any information regarding them may be sent to this column .... And then there's his wag who blatantly advertised on our own pet bulletin boards that Lt. Col. ... we had missed a week with publication of the Dial Sight!!!

"Found, One Dial Sight. Apply to So and So". Which was readily forgiven until one soldier telephoned us and wanted to know where the piece of military equipment was found .... Yep, we know the culprit .... He's all right—in a weigh. ... And he'll probably get a Harry half out of this, if he has discovered he has a conscience. ... Captain George Wallace, Hasty Pess now of the Medic is at the Depot, waiting for posting. ... Captain Jack Yarnell, expects to trade the "pips" and khaki for civvies in the near future .... Lt.-Corporal Reg. Hardwick spent a recent forty-eight with relatives here .... Ross Hart, Flugal has been transferred to the Trenton Station .... Sergt. Red Cross Report For June, July

During June and July 10 cartons of supplies were shipped to the headquarters of the Ontario Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society in Toronto—containing 1083 articles. Of knitted goods there were 424 pieces consisting of turtle neck sweaters, socks, helmets, mitts, wristlets, mitts, hurricane mitts, ribbed helmets, boys' and girls' sweaters, boys' and girls' mitts, children's slippers, boys' suits, boys' pullovers, baby jackets, bootees, bonnets and soakers.

There were 21 quilts and afghans and 15 jackets, clothing sent, for the British Civilian Relief besides women's skirts, women's pyjamas, infant's gowns, girls' tweed coats, pinafore dresses, fabric and blanket, layette dresses, infants' rompers, 360 different articles in layettes, etc., altogether numbering 618 pieces.

The knitters have had a fairly large variety of articles to knit during the last year foremost being the turtle neck sweaters for all services. We are glad to report that more are taking those out to do, for the call for these is always most "urgently needed". Besides these the knitters have made sleeveless sweaters, gloves, mitts, hurricane mitts, socks, ribbed helmets, toques, scarves, boys' and girls' pullovers, boys' and girls' socks and for women's auxiliaries there is a call for ankle socks, knickers, toques, gloves and sleeveless pullovers. These are the articles most urgently needed" at present. 'Rather General Understanding Upon Occupation'

Washington, Aug. 18 (AP)—President Roosevelt said today there was a rather general understanding among the Allies for occupation of Germany regardless of how or when the Nazis give up.

The President told a news conference that while there were no detailed arrangements there was a general understanding with Russia and Britain on the question.

Responding to a question, he expressed the belief that it would be well as easy to reach an understanding with China for occupation of Japan.

He said that certainly he was willing to confer with Prime Minister Churchill again, but when asked whether he would be this year, he replied by saying that was the same old story.

ELECTRIC APPLIANCES... Hard to Get BUT EASY TO CARE FOR

• Your electric refrigerator, range, iron, toaster, coffee maker and all other electric appliances are time and money savers . . . today they are more valuable than ever. The likelihood of early replacement is slim indeed . . . as long as materials are needed for war purposes. Make your refrigerator last—close refrigerator doors as quickly as possible, defrost regularly, and only use it for perishable goods.

Just a few minutes extra care . . . just a little extra thoughtfulness and they will continue to give you longer efficient service.

If repairs are needed see your local electrical dealer.

The Hun in Reverse

The way of the Germans is now very much in reverse. Allied strategy and might are playing havoc with the German legions in France where the Nazis are in a bad way both in the west and in the south and with her forces being forced into traps by the Allied armies.

The speed of the war in France is accelerating at a pace which indicates that deadly blows have been levelled at the enemy forces. Paris has fallen and Canadians are on the front line and American armor is moving about the environs of the French capital.

The United Nations are in-full power and are hammering the German armies with the prospects of the destruction of the Huns.

A late report on Friday voiced the expectation Field Marshal von Kluge's forces would be destroyed by the Allied forces in Western France. The success of the latest invasion forces in Southern France is a very heavy blow at the Nazi armies.

"From Kith to Kin"

The National Chapter of Canada, Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire, has prepared a little brochure, "From Kith to Kin," for presentation in the Old Country to the wives of Canadian servicemen who have married abroad. This booklet is an introduction to Canada from Canadian women to those of other lands "who will shortly be our compatriots." It was written and prepared by voluntary contribution to the Order by one of the members, Dr. Charlotte Whitton, C.B.E., in collaboration with members of the National Executive Committee and has been financed entirely from the Order's own fund to fill what the members feel is a definite need.

The little book is compact and attractive in appearance, aptly containing on its cover the Canadian coat-of-arms and as its frontispiece a photograph of the arrival of Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth at Parliament Buildings, Ottawa, in May 1939. It is prefaced with an address of greeting by Her Royal Highness, the Princess Alice, Countess of Athlone, consort of His Excellency the Governor General, who says, "Having myself spent the last four years in this country I know much about the people and the way they live. While in the main everything is much the same as at home, yet there are some quite distinct differences and I feel sure you will find all kinds of useful information in this little booklet."

It speaks to those "of the brave of spirit" who have chosen the way, so many of our forbears long ago chose,—to country over strange seas to a land, you have not known alone to build a new hearthstone, fixed in the ancient faith of our common traditions."

It voices a welcome to share the heritage in Canada, for "you who have married our sons, our brothers and our kin are now of our same kith."

Differences in accent, money, construction of train coaches and travel conditions, and customs are some of the matters noted. The size of Canada in territory and population, is drawn to the newcomers' attention and space is devoted to Canadian home life, shopping, clubs, the racial strains of Canada's people, system of Government, Canada's history, religion, school education, courts and legislation, health and welfare matters.

Part two is devoted to the Canadian year and climate. There is an intimate approach to the seasons with special references to each and the season activities of the people. It gives an intimate picture of Canadian life in the setting of the seasons and climate.

There is a directory of authorities of Dominion and Provinces, of leading churches, welfare services, women's organizations, books for reading about Canada and also a map of Canada with table of distances between principal points.

It is a treasury in brief space of many important facts about the Dominion, it is written in a chatty style which will appeal, it is most sympathetic in the introduction it furnishes to Canadian life and customs.

It is inspired by a spirit of patriotic zeal to keep this country "ours" with the newcomers and their husbands "because your men and ours have fought to keep it so. Together we pray for their safe return and until that day and forever after, hope with you and them to keep this land forever ours, forever strong, forever free." It is the assurance of a warm place in the hearts of the Canadian people for those who have married Canadian servicemen abroad and Canadian servicemen will appreciate what the I.O.D.E. and the Dominion are doing to make their establishment of homes in this land happy.

Nazis Try To Get Missionary Funds

The Germans in Normandy have been trying to get at the funds of the Norwegian Missionary Society to secure them for Nazi use. Wherever the Nazi has gone he has had his eyes on the funds of others. Some time ago the Nazis took over the Society, replacing the legally elected officers of the organization, which has 9,700 branches, with hand-picked Nazis. Then the devout Norwegians have raised a storm of protest. Nearly all of the Society's missionaries, now residing in Norway, have informed the new leaders that they will not recognize any but the old legally elected leadership and that they intend to continue their work without any connections with the Nazi leadership and without accepting any help whatever from it. District officials and local workers have also made it clear that they will have no truck with the Nazi leadership and district treasurers have announced that they will no longer forward contributions to be forwarded to the national headquarters.

"One of the chief reasons for the Nazi interference with the Mission Society is declared to be a desire to gain control of the organization's funds which have been accumulating steadily during four years of occupation and have now reaches an impressive amount," said "News of Norway." The Society of course has been cut off from sending money to foreign mission fields during these years.

Chemicals From Seaweed

(U. K. Information Office)

Gulliver found the scientists of Laputa distilling sunbeams from cucumbers. A no less amazing new industry is being developed in Scotland, in which chemicals from seaweed. In recent years seaweed has been found to have extensive potentialities in relation to the making of textiles, transparent paper, rubber, pharmaceutical and dental materials. A Scottish Seaweed Research Association is being formed to look into the possibilities of this new industry in Scotland, under the eyes of the Ministry of Supply and the Scottish Council on Industry. The Development Commissioners will give pound for pound grants to the Association up to £5,000 (about $25,000). The Engineering Division will maintain and develop a ship specially equipped for the survey and collection of deep sea weeds.

Bugs of Desperation

(Windsor Star).

Colorado beetles, dropped on Britain's potato fields by Nazi planes, constitute merely a further evidence of the desperation of our enemies, less spectacular than the robot bombs but none the less reliable. It is almost ludicrous to believe, of course, that enough of the pests could be scattered to do any real damage, particularly when Germany's ability to send over planes is strictly limited. This new scheme of sabotage distinctly resembles the clutching at a drowning man at a straw. We should be thankful for this further proof that the Hun is now convinced that his cause is hopeless.

Nazis Now Jittery

(News From Belgium)

In Liege Province and the Belgian Ardennes, German patrols fire at civilians without warning as soon as they believe themselves to be in danger.

Several Belgians have been killed or wounded on this account in recent weeks.

The Germans announce that they have arrested 17 patriots who had taken to the maquis in the Stavelot district, Liege Province.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

ANGRY SPEECH

So easily is harshness phrased! One never has to seek
The cruel and the bitter word that anger wants to speak.
Ill-tempered has a ready tongue! The dullest mind almost
Has plenty of profanity to pour its fury out.

'Tis strange that when we'd tell a friend
he's one that we admire
Somehow we never seem to find the words that we desire.
We grope to form the fitting phrase; for speech we're at a loss.
'Twixt heart and tongue there seems to lie a chasm few can cross.

But let there come a fancied slight or injury, large or small,
The cruel words and filthy words will like a torrent fall.
Then gentle folk will use a speech you'd think they wouldn't know,
And every time that this occurs I wonder why 'tis so.

Contrast Between Soldiers Shown By Their Reaction to Wounds

By ERNIE FYLE

On The Western Front—(By Wireless)—The other soldier had a white bandage around the calf of his left leg. He had loosely laced his legging back over the bandage.

He said the wound "didn't amount to a damn" and he wished they wouldn't sent him back from the lines. He said he had gone through Africa and Sicily without getting wounded, and now he'd got nicked. He was disgusted.

You could sense that this guy was a fine soldier, both by training but probably wasn't. I took him to be a farmer. He talked like a hillbilly, and beneath his whiskers you could tell he had a big, droll face.

He had been overseas a long time, raggedy French cigars, and he kept lighting them, funny-looking things, and putting them about three inches into his mouth. He wasn't nervous in the least.

The Canadian Sisters, the battalion surgeon, started to put him in the ambulance, but he was in the station, but the soldier said:

"Now wait. I know where there's one more who wounded pretty bad. One of them is a lieutenant who just got back from the hospital this morning from his other wound."

The soldier and the surgeon were there where the bullets were flying, but that if the aidmen would go he could wait well enough to get them up there. So the doctor named off half a dozen men to go with him.

The doctor also told the unwounded to go along and help carry. But one of the aidmen said: "We better not have him with us! Our own men are liable to start shooting at us."

"That's right," the doctor said, "leave him here. And he named off one other American to go. After they had left the doctor said: "That's the truth, and I never even thought of it."

The doctor and I sat a while on the stairway inside the farm-house, for shells had started hitting just outside again. It was a little bit, but doctor got up and said he was going to see how the stretcher case was getting along. I said I'd like to go with him. He said sure.

We stepped out across a sloping wheatfield. It was full of huge craters left by our bombers. There was a lull in the shelling as we crossed the field, but the ground with hills is that you never know when they will suddenly come to us and.

As we picked our way among the craters I thought: I wonder, very faintly, somebody call "Help!" It's odd how things drift from us in wartime. I remember thinking to myself, "Oh, pooh, that would be too dramatic. But like a book. You're just imagining it."

But the doctor had stopped, and he said, "Did you hear somebody yelling?"

So we listened again, and this time we could hear it plainly. It seemed to come from the far corner of the field, so we picked our way over in that direction.

Finally we say him, a soldier lying on his back in the wheat, and he was still yelling "Help!" as we approached. The aidmen who had started ahead of us had got him out in a bomb crater when the shelling started, and they had left and moved them to come on.

The wounded soldier was making an awful fuss. He was twisting and squirming, and moaning "Oh, my God! Oh, God!" He had a big bandage on his right hand and there was blood on his face.

The doctor took his scissors and cut the legging off, then cut the laces on the shoe. Then he peeled off a bloody sock and cut the pants leg up to the knee. Without any trouble. The soldier kept his eyes shut and kept moaning and crying.

When the doctor would try to talk to him he would just groan and cry. Finally the doctor said: "The doctor got out of him that he had been in the army for 18 months and his sergeant had bandaged it and then he had to wait for the war. Then, coming across the field, a shell fragment had got him in the leg.

"The doctor looked him over carefully, found two very small holes hast above the ankle. The doctor said nothing but I knew from the noise I think the doctor was disgusted.

He said, "It's making a hell of a fuss over nothing." Then to one of the aidmen he said, "Better give him a shot of morphine to quiet him."

Thereupon the soldier squirmed and moaned, "Oh, no, no, no! Oh, God, no!" The doctor and I shook our head, and the aidman cut his sleeve, took a sterilized needle, stuck the needle in and squeezed the vial.

The aidman, trying to be gentle, patted the face of the soldier and said the same old needle, ain't it?" But the soldier just groaned and moaned said, "Oh, my God!"

The aidman threw lit another skinny cigar, as though he were at a national convention instead of the battlefront, and the doctor and the litterbearers started back with our wounded soldier. I left them there, on with the soldier to hunt for other wounded.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

VITAMIN A IN YOUR DAILY DIET

Butter, the richest food source of vitamin A, is not obtainable in the family diet on that account. If the price of, oleomargarine is low enough to make its use reasonable, then by all hands and will be quite as well nourished if table is provided with adequate amounts of other good sources of vitamin A such as cheese (genuine, not processed), milk and milk products, animal liver, kidneys, egg yolks, most of the green and yellow vegetables, tomatoes and tomato juice (fresh or canned), ripe bananas. Not only whole milk, but also cream, skim milk and buttermilk (genuine) and also eggs are often regarded as unfit for human nutrition) are good food sources of vitamin A.

In recent years by great many margarine manufacturers, with permission of the government, add vitamin A concentrate to margarine at the rate of vitamin A—9000 units per pound to their product. I regard it as a matter of butter or oleomargarine or other fat as a pretty hefty quantity of fat to take in a day, and also above the oil or fat you get in other food, but one would have to keep in that much of this doctored oleomargarine to get over 100 units of vitamin A—not a very good source of vitamin A one gets in about a pint of milk.

Although there are brands of oleomargarine that keep well under ordinary conditions without any chemical preservative, most kinds are treated with sodium benzoate to retard spoilage under ordinary conditions. Makers of these products justify the addition of the chemical preservative by filing claims they say is for the benefit of government experts, that up to seven grains a day may be consumed by anybody with impunity.

Far be it from me to question the finding but I think that the oleomargarine without sodium benzo-

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

"Chard" is a Latin word meaning "thistle" and was originally applied to the edible stalks and leaves of the globe artichoke. Swiss chard is a favorite leafy garden crop, eclogy to the beet family.

The "leaves of grass" mentioned twice in the King James Version of the Bible, both times in the New Testament, are found in Matthew 24:34.

Noah Webster's "American Spelling Book" sold about 70,000,000 copies, supposedly more than any other book except the Bible.

"Pedigree" in the sense of a genealogical table is believed to be derived from old French "pie de grue," a crane's foot, from the three-line mark like a broad arrow, used in denoting family trees, was fancied to resemble the foot of a crane.

Because of the presence of many fresh-water sharks, swimming in Lake Simcoe, Ontario, where it is equivalent to committing suicide.

"Fly" is a horse called dobbin? The term is a diminutive of the proper name Bob, which is a variation of Robin and Rob, which in turn are variations of the proper name Robert. "Dobbin" was widely used in England centuries ago as a pet name for horses that size and without added vitamin A. If I still ate them and, I'm sure don't mind.

If I can't find margarine free from sodium benzoate and added vitamin A, then I'll grit my teeth—and incidentally I still may do both to grit with (a fair number of them are working on my own) and go back to butter, even if it costs 20% more. So far as taste goes, I'd as soon have oleomargarine as butter.

Old Wife's Legends Never Die

Ben Told it is bad for child to sleep with older person, as the child may absorb strength away from the child. Is this so? Daughter, 9, sleeps with grandmother, 72.

(Mrs. L. M.)

Answer—Generally it is better for every one to have his own bed. But there is no foundation for the notion that one sleeping partner takes strength away from the other, old or young. Both will get better rest if they sleep each in her own bed. They are less likely to share any infection either may happen to have if they do not sleep together.

August Days

How the glory of the sunlight
Floods these gladsome days of summer!
Field and woodland, vale and upland
Drenched in golden, mellow light!
While the rustling corn is tassel
And the buckwheat white with blossom
In the glinting August sunshine
Makes a picture of delight.

August comes with flower-crowned tresses
Bringing in her hand rich treasure—
Golden grain and fragrant fruit-age.

Wraps the freighted branches lean,
Quiet eves with lengthening shadows
Hasten on the fields of harvest.
And at night the mystic moonlight
Makes earth a magic scene.

Sweet the gifts of flower and fruitage,
Rich the golden grain of harvest,
Dear the days of dream and vision,
Spent upon the shadowed shore!
Birth of pain and life and beauty dreaming
Lo! We see in misty vision
Summer gathering up her flowers
Passing from our sight once more.

BEAUTY By Helen Jameson

SELECTING A PERFUME

Yes, August Bride, we know all about it. You doted on your favorite perfume; it came from France. You used it for years and years. It gave you a terrific spirit, tickling your nostrils and soothing your soul. Your friends would sniff and say, "What a delightful perfume! What is it?" And you would smile wisely, and keep silent; maybe shrug your shoulders. You wanted that perfume for your own exclusive use in your immediate social circle. Now you can't get it for love or money. And that's the way selfishness and bad deeds catch up with one.

Good perfumes can be had — selecting and enchanting ones. Friends say there's a large stock on hand when the war started. Those who compound them are talented enough to put them in small containers. You buy a very little, find out how you like it; if you don't like it, you won't run much financial chance. It takes a little time for these precious fluids to come close to one's heart. All too often that which made the strong appeal proves to be a bore— like some people you meet. You just can't live with a perfume of which you have tired.

Sweet perfumes appeal to the imagination, to the emotions. They have a romantic quality and that is later why all women love them. During the time when old man Depression was with us, many a girl found it easy economy to do without perfume, certain privations, hard to relinquish the luxuries of the toilet table.

When a girl says that a certain scent "makes her sick," she may be telling the truth, mean precisely what she says. Nerves are affected by odors; there may actually be present a chemical reaction of nausea. There are sympathetic bonds between the nervous system and the digestive tract.

The exotic lady loves heavy perfumes; seems able to get away with them. The timid, naive girl should use the florished productivity of the valley, gardenia, jasmine. Lady Fashion has revived the old time favorites—rose and violet. Neither one appeals to your good looks reporter; both are very likely to be too violent and pungent. But remember here and there. Other women love them.

Conserve perfume by using an atomizer. After the bath, spray the neck and arms. The warmth of the flesh will cause the alcohol content of the perfume to evaporate, leaving only the essential oils. Never put perfume on your hair; exudations from sweat and sebaceous glands will change its character.

Announcing the Engagement

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,—

I have just received my engagement ring, and when my fiance comes home for his next furlough, my mother and father are planning to give a dinner to announce the engagement.

1.—Is it necessary to invite any of my fiance's relatives besides his mother and father?

2.—At what time during the dinner is the announcement made? Who makes it? Please tell me just how the announcement is made.

3.—Are printed engagement announcements sent to other relatives who are not invited to the dinner, and to friends' of his and mine?

R. W.

1.—How many of your fiance's relatives are invited to the dinner depends on how many of your relatives are invited. If he has brothers and sisters, they should be invited, if possible. You shouldn't invite only his mother and father if you are inviting many more of your relatives.

2.—When the engagement is to be announced at a dinner, the news comes from the girl's father. Usually, after the first course, the girl's father rises, fills his glass, and says, "A standing toast. . . . To our Mary and her future husband," or "I want you to drink to two young people whose happiness is very close to the hearts of all of us. To Mary (he raises his glass and looks at her) and to Jack (he raises his glass again, and looks at him)."

All the guests, except you and your fiance, immediately rise and drink the toast. After the guests sit down, your fiance rises and responds to this toast, saying, perhaps, "Mary and I thank you all most heartily, for your good wishes". And to this he may add any "bright comments" he wishes!

3.—Printed or engraved engagement invitations are not in good form or in good taste. Before the engagement dinner you and your fiance should write or telephone to your relatives and friends. . . . those who are not to be invited to the dinner — telling them the news of the engagement, and asking them to keep the secret until the date you tell them is to be the announcement party.

How Not to Have a Shower.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Would you please give me your frank opinion about a shower invitation I have just received? It is from a woman I don't know very well, and it invites me to attend a shower for her daughter.

Instead of the usual invitation to a shower, it requests that each guest send three dollars by a certain date to cover the expense of buying a kitchen set.

I consider this invitation rude. What is your opinion?

Rita

I think the word "rude" is a very polite one to apply to such a high-handed invitation. In the first place, it is not good form for a relative to give a shower — it gives the impression of an obviously-planned affair to fill the girl's new home. And this is precisely the impression given by the invitation you received.

In the second place, you don't know this woman well enough to be invited to such an intimate party as a shower, and in these days of limited and diminishing budgets, it's taking quite a liberty to ask that three dollars be sent by someone who has no special reason to grant this request.

If I were you, I would write a courteous note thanking the invitation (even though you don't feel very thankful!) and giving reasons for not being able to attend.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Girl Prefers to Live With Grandmother Rather Than Stepmother With Whom She's Unacquainted.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

When my wife died, leaving a baby six months old, I turned my little daughter over to my wife's parents, as there was no one to care for her. That was ten years ago, and my mother-in-law has my daughter.

There is large estate in litigation, and the custody of my deceased wife's child was awarded to them, with the "our side". The other litigants, however, had threatened removal of my child, and the case was decided largely in their favor.

My mother-in-law now declines to give me my daughter, saying she was cared for the girl practically since birth, and that she can give the child a better home and background than I. While this is true, I haven't a father's right, even though I've been unsuccessful and cannot do as well for the girl as her grandmother?

In deferring to my mother-in-law all these years am I putting off my marriage to a splendid girl—we've been engaged for more than six years—I'm rather ashamed of myself. The child is devoted to her grandmother and seems indifferent to me, but I think I'd have her in a home with me, even though my finance does not seem to care for the arrangement.

W. W. J.

The girl prefers her grandmother's home and your fiance does not care especially for the role of stepmother when she marries you, and as you have lived apart from your daughter all ten years it seems you would be invoking all sorts of trouble if you insist on breaking up your daughter's home arrangements and taking her to live with you and your wife. The sensible thing would seem to let the girl become better acquainted with you and your new wife, and after that happens, she may agree to spend part time with you at least.

Americans Dissatisfied with Home Treatment.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 years old, a high school graduate (high honors) and want to study to be a nurse. My parents won't consent. I have everything I want in a home; help my parents in our business, but I'm never allowed to go anywhere. Have no girl friends.

I have one married sister, and the older sister who stays at home claims all my things. I'm not even allowed to select my own clothes as my mother and a sister buy the things they want me to wear. My life is very unhappy. I never went to a single school dance, because I wasn't allowed. Don't you think I'm old enough to select clothes for myself? I also have a brother who is in the Army overseas.

H. H.

It seems to me a girl of 19 should be given some power of choice as to her future life work. In these days when nurses are so urgently needed all over the world, it seems an admirable choice for a girl to make. But the hours are long and the work arduous, and perhaps your mother may think your health would not stand up under the strain.

If she's willing, why not ask her to let you enlist as a Nurse's Aide? A boon of duty is all that's required.

As for your clothes, do you want to pick out the strange looking things you see the girls dashing by wearing. If you do, that may be your mother's and sister's reason for selecting your wardrobe. I agree with you heartily, that it's too bad they never let you go to school dances.

A real luxury these times is the fun of having breakfast in bed. Worthy of such an event is a bed jacket in pale blue satin trimmed with Val lace and fleral appliques in deeper blue satin.

Feathers fly onto autumn hats at a gay pace. A youthful off-face, deep-back cloche in black needlepoint velvet is trimmed at one side with sprays of glycerined ostrich and pompons.

The Marry-Go-Round

When an attractive man stays single up to thirty or over, the girls always wonder WHY he does it—the men wonder HOW he does it.

Before a man goes in for one of these harmless-looking summer romances that end in engagements, he should first make a mental note of all the unexpected exits.

In fact, after a little misunderstanding, many a man is glad to get back to his wife just as a woman "goes back to Mother"—after protesting long enough to get support.

A man may get mad enough to fling a precious Ming vase or an expensive bridge lamp at his wife, but we never heard of one who ate her last big head to rush upstairs and use a guest-towel to punish her.

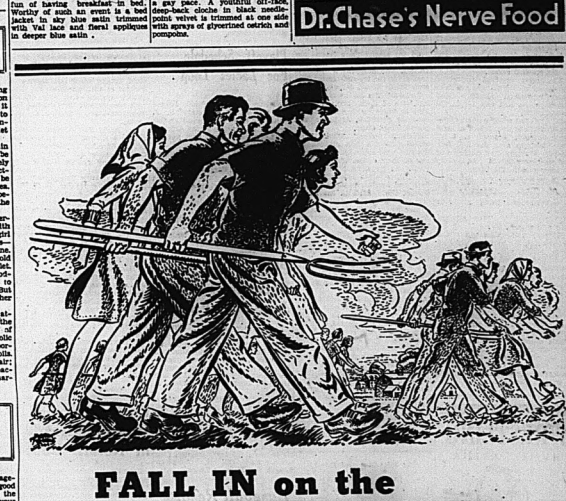
And many a man who is brave enough to face a machine-gun hasn't the courage to go back to the shop and try to exchange a necktie or a pair of stretch socks without taking the "Little Woman" along to back up his morale.

Some women are like some foreign countries; they never declare war—they just walk in and annex whatever they want whether it's cook, cook your face powder or your boy friend, and then, when you protest, accuse you for starting the battle.

It may take twenty minutes to coax a man out of bed in time to get to the office; but it's astonishing how promptly and alertly he springs up to keep a date to go fishing.

Good gamblers, whether at cards, love or matrimony are good sports who know how to win fairly and gracefully—and how to lose with a smile and no hard feelings.

A girl always looks back on an affair as a man she might have gotten; a man looks back on one as a girl who might have got him!



Fashion Flashes

A HARDY ANNUAL is the cost dress that comes into the sartorial scene about now. A good model is of linen-like, black agrain rayon with long, slanting, inverted revers or satin and slanting funnel pockets at the hipline. Two-button closing at waistline and wrap-around skirt.

Real beauty is apparent in many of the new handbags, despite he lack of metal frames. A dressy tote is of black suede — long, narrow, with deep wide gussets and a wide, box-shaped frame of sparkling lucite.

A strong bid for blouse honors will be made this autumn by the overblouse, a style in eclipse for some months. The new models are to be shirring over the ribs for a softly feminine look. A long torso effect in blue crepe is used for a smart evening dress with little cops and closed umbrellas in white sequins embroidered all over.

Player Traffic Between League Joke Says Emms

"I think it terrible that any one club should be allowed to draft and add players when they can only use 11 any one game," he said. "The Flyers are scheduled to start training here early in October and I'm going to ask every players traffic between the two leagues. No wonder there's a joke in American League the Senior League".

CASUAL COMMENT

Secretary (or railroad's divisional superintendent) — We are being asked again by a farmer, etc.

Superintendent — That's the trouble with our express train speed duties. They go so fast they kill those cows that farmers can't afford to wander on the right-of-way.

The secretary (agitating) — It isn't that. This farmer complains that the trains go so slow that the passengers lean out the windows and milk the cows along the roadway.

When the average man pays a debt he acts as if he were conferring a great favor on his creditor.

Up in Oshawa today a unique baseball game is being played. For the past two years the Oshawa Baseball League has operated with better than average success. As a matter of fact the Motor City kids ball loop packs 'em into the Alexander Park diamond to the tune of every Saturday throughout the summer season and they are doing much to educate the teen aged lads in baseball in preparation for the post war period when baseball will again flourish in this part of the province.

Today is "Baseball Day" in Oshawa. A number of the Junior Oshawa C. O. B. I. players are playing an exhibition game versus the Motor City Old Timers and according to Sport Scribe George Campbell over 2,000 fans are expected to take in this unique game. Both veterans are Dalnty Eddie Biddle, Letty Wills and the Patton will again accord the old-timers mound and plate duties for the day with some pitching efforts. Al Tyson and "Sweet" Bennett will coach the catchers' paraphernalia all in the interests of helping promote baseball in the city.

Then there will be "Kip" Rowbotham, manager of baseball-ites in Oshawa two decades ago, Frank McCallum, Buck Wilson, the Pitt brothers and Ray Hunt, "Moose" Mathews, Art Legg, Teddy Saunders and a host of other old-timers headed by Cy Dell, former C. O. B. I. mentor. It will be a great day for both the kids and the veterans, while the fans will also get their share of fun.

Here in Belleville the same idea could be put into effect in the interests of the two local junior ball teams that have struggled along all summer without much support or encouragement, especially from the baseball players of former days. On Sunday afternoon another game will be played at the Fair Ground. But these games aren't enough. The kids should be given proper coaching and instruction and the fans should be organized in the interests of promoting baseball in Belleville. The paramount item is to have a leader step forth and organize the thing and then—

This and That.

In reply to a query as to whether Jimmy Foxx, the old Boston slugger who is now set to coach the Chicago Cubs, ever started a game as a pitcher, Jimmy answers in the negative is No . . . Foxx did pitch one inning for the Red Sox against Detroit, however, fanning one Tiger and yielding no runs . . . Sports oddity — The San Francisco Seals, second in team batting in the Pacific Coast League, haven't a .300 hitter on the roster . . . With the R.C.A.F. Bomber Group, Aug. 13 (CP)—Tail-End Tony Mc-Carthy, with a Hurricane and a Canadian bomber with strong hands that once crashed many an opponent to the canvas, has diminished a bit over his 36-odd operational flights and summarized the game: "There's no fun in being a league."

"There's either do or you don't," said the former star outside wing of Ottawa Roughriders. "We used to go pretty well playing against Toronto and the rest of the Big Four clubs. But nothing like this. There's no allowance for mistakes here."

It wasn't any fun for instance, the night over Frederikshaven when a German fighter came rearing out of the sky and lambasted Warrington Pilot Officer Ray Sanders, a Regina boy, and Sgt. Jack Scott, a Lancaster, - which was dropping bombs on a marshalling yard near Leipzig.

Katan Matched With McCready In Return Bout

Conceding to the popular demand of Belleville wrestling fans, Promoter Frank Tunney re-engaged Earl McCready and John Katan for another British Empire championship elimination bout at the Hume Arena tonight, commencing at 8.30.

"The reason I was persuaded to re-match this event just at this time because Katan is complaining he was given the business in the Hume Arena last week," said Billie Watson in Toronto. McCready assured me he was willing to meet Katan again providing he was assured a shot at Wilson's crown if he defeated Katan in Belleville. It surely looks like a great night for the Hume Arena fans," announced Manager Tunney while talking over the long distance telephone to Sports Editor Wallace Gerow today.

In support of the ninety minute feature bout Dr. Len Hall will meet "Irish Tom" Collins of Buffalo, while in the opener Jimmy Lyons of Joe Maich will tangle with that ring ruffian, Wanjo Singh.

London, Aug. 13 —(AP)— Soviet Russia's "extraordinary state commission for investigating crimes committed on Soviet soil" today accused the Finnish government of "deliberately seeking to wipe out the population of the Karelian Autonomous republic" in order to turn the area "into a Finnish colony."

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Aug. 19. (CP)—Lacrosse, the much-neglected National summer sport of Canada, always creates considerable discussion among fans who wonder what is the matter with the game and what is to be done with it. The editor thinks, of course, to pour a little blood plasma into the game's sluggish veins and bring it back to popular appeal.

In this respect, Ken Johnson of the Owen Sound Sun-Times suggests it wouldn't be a bad idea to call the game to our cousins south of the border. Being a rough and tough pastime, lacrosse would suit the "extrovert Americans" down to the bottom floor, opines Ken. He hazards the guess that if Toronto does play host to the United States it will be a big success, drawing crowds as large as Jockey Smith's Sunday Beach Canadian sport. Gibb's appeal so much to the Americans at first either, but look at it now!

Athletic Department:

Getting a wee bit tired of crouch, duck behind a plate catching and strikes-is Roy Van Grafian, veteran international league umpire from Rochester. It's reported he is thinking of leaving the game and hieing away to the greener pastures of the American girls softball league as a coach. At that, the scenery would be much better.

Tennis in Demand:

If that oft-repeated, oft-denied report that Ben Timmis will be hoisted as coach of Hamilton Wildcats has any truth in it, it means a new job. Probably any football squad around the country would be willing to take a chance on the phenomenal little lad that starred for the Dominion title last fall. There's talk around Kitchener-Waterloo of getting the district back into football again after two years, and some would like to see Timmis taken on. Brian handled the coaching duty for a Kitchener-Waterloo intermediate team several years ago, and is well liked.

He Woke up Screaming:

LESSON NO. 438

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

Don't tell this to the marines. They know it already. When you are going to attack, prepare a plan in advance. First reconnoitre. Get a line on the enemy means of defense.

In the play of a bridge hand, you have seven lines of attack: Trumping, establishing suit, unblocking, strip-and-endplay, squeeze, intrasignal coups, and finesse.

Each principle of play has its own peculiar symptoms. If the symptoms are not present, that play should be avoided and the next plan studied. Choose the plan most promising for success.

Suppose you are declarer in the south at a six heart contract in this deal:

	NORTH
	♠ 7 6 4 2
	♥ 9 6 5 3
	♦ 7 5 4
	♣ 10 6 5
WEST		EAST
♠ K J 9 8 5		♠ 3
♥ 10 2		♥ 8 4
♦ J 9 6		♦ 10 8 3 2
♣ Q J 10 8		♣ 9 7 6 4 3
	SOUTH
	♠ A Q 10
	♥ A K Q J 7
	♦ A K Q
	♣ A 2

Only two plans of play are available here. One is the strip-and-endplay. The other is a finesse. Or, if absolutely necessary, two finesses.

A strip-and-endplay is safer than a finesse. A strip-and-end and a finesse is safer than two finesses. So, if one finesse must be taken, prepare for it in combination with the strip-and-end.

Where all other suits can be stripped first, there are no finessing combinations that make the endplay automatic. Of these, the easiest to see is A Q 10; like in the spade suit shown here.

Win the first club, two trumps, another club, and three diamonds. Enter dummy with a trump and lead a spade from there. If east plays small, play any spade from south except the ace.

If west wins, it makes no difference who has the unseen other high spade. A spade lead from west comes around to your remaining spade ten ace made up of the ace and another honor.

Instead of a spade, if west leads back a club or a diamond, you trump in dummy and shift your lowest south spade. It is automatic.

AT THE CAPITOL

Charlie Chan in the Secret Service

(First Belleville Showing)

Charlie Chan, in the person of Sidney Toler, returns to the screen of the Capitol Theatre, Sunday midnight in "Charlie Chan in the Secret Service", the Monogram drama which chronicles further adventures of the famous Chinese detective.

This is the first of a new series of mystery dramas starring Toler in the familiar characterization which has long established the Oriental sleuth as a screen favorite. The supporting cast is headed by Gwen Kenyon in the principal feminine role, and also features Mantan Moreland, Benson Fong, Marianne Quon, Leiah Tyler, George Lewis and many other well-known Hollywood players.

As the story opens, the inventor of a secret weapon for the government is murdered in Washington, leaving a party in his own home, and the plans stolen. Detective Chan then charges the entire household and there are exciting situations before the case is finally brought to a surprising solution.

The added comedy attraction "He Stayed For Breakfast" starring Loretta Young and Melvyn Douglas, with Alan Marshal, Eugene Pallette and Una O'Connor is said to be one of the gayest, laugh-the-clock-around affair ever made.

A new Canada Carries On featurette, "Wounded in Action", is also shown.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Ghost Catchers"

Gloria ——— is unspoiled, sweet-faced little girl who scored a sudden success seven years ago in a picture called "The Under Pup." Grown up, she is now a glamor girl in every sense of the word.

In "Ghost Catchers," which stars Olsen and Johnson and which is now playing at the McCarthy Theatre, Gloria plays her first fully "grown-up" role. For the first time she wears her hair in an upswept coiffure, she engages in a romance. Indeed, she appears in a boudoir scene—wearing a silken negligee.

All these evidences of maturity are very pleasing to Gloria, who has considered herself an adult ever since she passed her sixteenth birthday. To her mother, father and her many friends in the Universal lot, however, she was still "little" Gloria, the child actress.

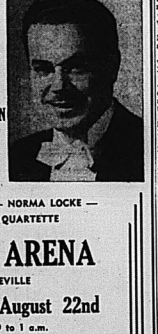
"I can't make them realize that I'm not a child any more," she said ruefully. "But when soldiers come on the set they whistle when they see me. What better proof could anyone want that I've grown up?"

Yes, Gloria Jean is a child no longer. And she's proud of it.

Second feature, "Lumberjack," with William Boyd, completes a star-studded program.

AT THE BELLE

"Up in Arms" in Color



With its hilarious action filmed in Technicolor, "Up in Arms," Samuel Goldwyn's new RKO Radio release, now on the Belle Theatre screen stars Danny Kaye and a brilliant cast of favorites in a rollicking tale of a hypochondriac elevator-operator who is drafted into the Army. What happens to the Army is sad indeed, but it all makes for one of the funniest musical comedy offerings ever screened.

Dinah Shore, Dana Andrews, Constance Dowling and Louis Calhern have the other chief roles in the laughfest, the action of which opens in New York City and winds up on the mythical South Pacific island of Bagona from which the Japs are to be pushed by Uncle Sam's armed forces.

Danny Weems, who thinks everything in the world is wrong with him, and his pal Joe are drafted. When they complete their basic training they find their nurse girl friends, Virginia and Mary, have joined the Army too, and are given lieutenants in the Medical corps. All four of them head for the South Seas aboard the same transport, although Mary is a stowaway, thanks to Danny's generosity.

Danny gets into plenty of trouble with his buddies and with the commanding officer as a result, but shortly after landing at Bagona he is captured by the Japs, and after an uproarious mix-up comes out of the jungle with a string of captured Japs. Nobody quite knows how this has happened, but anyhow, Danny turns out to be a hero and all is forgiven in a tuneful, spectacular finale.

The versatile Danny Kaye makes his screen debut in the role created as the neurotic Weems, and Dana Andrews portrays Joe, with Miss Shore as Virginia and Miss Dowling, a glamorous newcomer from Broadway, as Mary. Louis Calhern is seen as the boys' apolitecal colonel.

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 16

Instead of gaining anything by this statement she had made, she not only hadn't strengthened her own story, but she had added another burden to Clyde's. For a moment Jeanne hesitated. If she wasn't really guilty, it was enough to make a person doubt her own sanity.

Miss Marston excused herself. "I'm going up to a meeting," she told the girl.

After she had gone, Jeanne paced the room, trying to think of something to bolster her charges against Dr. Clyde. If only she could talk to Max — he would believe her.

But would he? After what had happened last night, it was very much less predictable than she had thought. Surely, if he had heard anything about it, he would have come to her.

That he really loved her, as he had said.

When she viewed his position calmly, however, she couldn't blame him for staying away — keeping clear of the mess into which she had stumbled.

Jeanne became restless.

He had his army career to think of. He was an officer with an important post. Why should he jeopardize his future by becoming involved with a girl who was suspected of being an enemy agent?

She could see his side of it. When she took time to think it out.

Her thoughts were interrupted when the door opened. Kay stood there a moment, and then came inside, closed the door after her.

"I don't know what your big idea was, Jeanne," she said, an edge in her voice, "sending Miss Marston here. It's a lot of lies."

"I didn't." Jeanne started, but Kay interrupted her.

"Oh, she did. Wilbe Marston didn't really tell me it was you, she is so nosey, she thinks she wasn't hard for me to make an intruder guess."

"But what she said was true," Jeanne insisted. "Max and I were to have a diamond ring here — Dr. Clyde gave it to him."

"Humph. I don't know who gave it to you or where you got it, but it didn't come from Max. He's broke."

"How can you be so positive about it?" Jeanne demanded.

"Because I phoned him, that's why."

"Oh," the girl breathed. She hadn't thought to do that. Maybe she had expected her to lose her temper, find out here and now just what Grade assigned him that would disqualify him for Max.

"So, whatever your scheme was, it didn't work," Kay went on, smiling, needlessly. "Dr. Clyde said he not only was not engaged to you, he never had thought of such a thing — ever."

"Well he certainly is very ungallant to say the least," Jeanne murmured, weakly.

"Furthermore," he hinted that you were subject to hallucinations, and that that was probably just another one of them."

Kay was pleased with her self that she fairly gloated as she marched proudly from the room.

If she had been the sort of girl who cried the way to relieve tears, Jeanne would have pillowed her head on Miss Marston's bed and sobbed her heart out. Instead keeping firm control of herself, she tried to straighten her thoughts to fit the new situation.

All right, she stumbled and lost. She would have to make the best of it. In trying to outmaneuver now was how much she had lost by her attempt at strategy. Would Clyde accept her motive in telling the awful lie to Kay about their engagement?

When she considered this carefully, she decided that he would. He was a very clever man. He had proved that in the way he had so completely deceived her from the very first moment he had met her.

He had proved it, too, by the way he had everyone else in the college and in Shelton. Why, he had even pulled the wool over Lerving's eyes!

She marveled, now at her nerve in trying to undermine in him in such a simple manner. She might have known that he had prepared for before and for every eventuality, even as he was in such a dangerous business of aiding the enemy of his country. He wasn't a man to be caught by some little trick.

There must be some weak spot in his armor, something that she had overlooked. Something that he had neglected to do, despite his thoroughness in watching over details.

Her only hope was to find this weakness and exploit it to the limit.

If she were only free to come and go, she might be able to find something that would give her a lead. But she knew Dannels was right outside the door, and Lerving — probably posted a guard near enough so he have another man around, too, in case she was successful in slipping Dannels.

Jeanne wondered if Levering was keeping a watch on Clyde, too, she hoped he would. It was certain that he couldn't stand idly by, now that she had discovered the truth of his mission in Shelton and wait for the F. B. I. to pin something on him.

No, he probably right now was planning something else, some new way to involve her more deeply and divert suspicion away from himself.

Perhaps Kay had gone to him when she left the office. Maybe now that she had linked the two together, Clyde would marry Kay after all. He might feel that it was necessary to buy her silence, and she probably knew anything about him.

Letter.

Miss Marston came back into the room and barely noticed as Jeanne sat where she'd been and went directly to the safe. She twirled the dial, working at the combination, and then swung the heavy door back. She produced a key and unlocked an inner drawer and took out a letter.

She put the letter in her purse, relocked the safe and left the room, her heels clicking purposefully on the hardwood floor.

Jeanne turned as she heard voices in the outer office and then the door swung open and Max strode in. His army went out to her and she faintly ran as she crossed the room to him.

A feeling of blessed relief swept over her as his arms closed tightly about her and she felt his lips on her hair, then forehead, her mouth.

Tears streamed down her cheeks as she clung to him and he held her as though he would never let her go. He murmured words of endearment, and his voice soothed her ragged nerves torn by the experience she had been through.

"You poor thing, you poor child," Max repeated over and over, his hand stroking her hair.

It was several minutes before Jeanne was able to control her feelings enough that she stood back from him at arms length.

"Oh, Max, I knew you'd come — I knew it. Even though my reason told me that you despised me, my heart kept telling me that you loved me."

"Of course I came as soon as I found out what had happened" Max said. "What do you think I am — a fair weather friend? Besides, I love you — you know I love you more than anything else in life. I got special leave and broke all speed records getting over here to tell me, now, what it's all about?"

"I heard a lot of it, but about my espionage activities?"

"You mean being suspected of being a German spy?" Max looked down into her face at Levering. He came over to camp and questioned me and found out and what I had seen of you since you came here.

"I told him that you were the sweetest girl in the world — the most loyal girl I had ever met. Things I wanted to tell you when I found you at Linda's apartment."

"Oh, Max," Jeanne said "Now I know you love me. No man would say those things to another man unless he meant them."

"Of course I do."

But tossing that ring away the way you did."

"That was a bit of bad temper — something I don't usually give away to. But I was so jealous and angry when I thought you were having a date with Clyde, that I really didn't know what I was doing. Do you forgive me, darling?"

"Of course."

"Then suppose you tell me what this is all about — this spy business, I mean."

Whole Story.

So the girl told him the whole story, leaving out nothing. Max exclaimed several times at various points, but he let her steadily on, telling the entire tale just as she had told to Levering.

"What did Levering say to all this?" the captain asked, when she had finished.

"He didn't say very much, but he acted like he thought Dr. Clyde was right when he intimated that I was a girl crazy. Now, I think he has left guards here, indicates that he is far from being convinced that I told him the truth. You believe me, don't you dear?"

"Of course I believe every word of it."

"Even with the damaging evidence against me and the fact that Dr. Clyde's record seems to think I've brought his beloved college into disgrace?"

"It doesn't make any difference to me what any of them say — I know you, Innocent as a victim of circumstance."

"Circumstances largely built up by the very smart Dr. Clyde."

"Then he has succeeded in fooling me completely," Max admitted. "I thought he was a dope — that's the reason I was so furious when I thought you had a date with him."

"You understand now, don't you, that I had to do what I did? Play the game as I had been told to do."

Jeanne told him about the session she and Miss Marston and Miss Fisher had had with Dr. Norwood about the secret reports which Levering had typed in the typewriter in the dean's outer office.

Camouflage.

"I should have guessed then that Dr. Clyde was the guilty person," she said. But it never occurred to me. He's the last one you look in the jungles — he has camouflaged himself so well that it seems to fit right into the scenery.

"Only his camouflage has been good, Max said, very competent in building up a reputation as a man of learning and a respected expert of double-dealing. I can see why it is so hard for Dr. Norwood and Miss Marston to believe that he is a spy, and I'm glad you didn't have to admit he's clever if he fooled Levering."

"I'm going to hunt him up and have it out with him — Levering, I mean," Max said. "I've got to have action. He's got to believe our story. Want to come along with me?"

"Mr. Dannels will let me go."

"Okay, we'll ask him. Better yet, we'll walk right past him. If he doesn't want you to go, he'll stop you."

Jeanne powdered her face and smoothed her hair, and then smiled to Max that she was ready. But, they had no more than opened the door when Dannels confronted them.

"If you please, Miss Hallard," he said, holding up his hand.

"Where can I go, I'm permitted to leave here?"

Dannels said it would be better if you stayed here until the same Levering."

Jeanne turned to the captain.

"You see, Max asked.

"No," I see." Max answered grimly. "And I'm going to do something about it. I'm not so ingenuous that this Clyde is permitted to hold you prisoner, as he has declared here." He turned to Dannels. "Where is Levering?"

"I don't know sir."

"Well, I'll find him if he's in Shelton or around the college. And soon, too, heels clicking purposefully on the hardwood floor.

Jeanne turned as she heard voices in the outer office and then the door swung open and Max strode in. His army went out to her and she faintly ran as she crossed the room to him.

being aimed at. These people have been very clever.

"If they can underwrite persons of the caliber of Norwood, it seem that he was trying to loot a rich trust fund, it would shake the confidence of Canadians.

"Of course there was the question of money involved, too. If Clyde could expose Norwood as a crook and make people believe it there was every chance in the world that he would succeed him as head of the school.

"There are millions of dollars in the trust fund — more than enough for an enemy agent to use to carry on his work. For never could it, once Norwood was out, and Clyde in, be watched very closely as now. He could get the millions left by old Hallard to support this school."

"I can't see how such a plan would shake people's confidence," Miss Marston spoke up, even as doubted Dr. Norwood myself until my better judgment asserted itself and I decided something was radically wrong. He is a power in educational circles, and you can imagine how it would react on people who believed in him if he were disgraced."

"I can't see how Jeanne got mixed up in this mess," Max said.

"It's hardly necessary yet and of course we have no proof," Levering explained. "We'll have to get that later. But I'm sure Dr. Clyde — the gang Clyde has been working with knew all about the real Jeanne Hallard, I think she must have died while trying to escape from France and they seized her passport."

Bait.

"Then if my theory is correct they looked around for someone they could use whose description fitted Miss Hallard, and saved the precious passport in front of her. It was tempting bait — something that anyone would have seized to get back home.

"I have no doubt in my mind, now, but that Clyde engineered the deal through agents in London. It just happened to be Miss Taylor who was chosen. They would have to deliberately connect her with a Nazi crowd, so the ring was inserted, and they were able to feel she would have to do some favor in return for her passport."

3 to 4 Million Dollar Fire Loss At Harbor Grace

St. John's Nfld., Aug. 19 (CP Cable)—Loss in the four-hour fire Thursday that swept through the business district of Harbor Grace was estimated today at from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000.

The fire left 25 families homeless but there was no loss of life or injuries.

Control of the fire was gained by Royal Canadian navy fire crews and civilian firemen, who arrived 40 miles to the scene north-west of this capital.

Among the buildings destroyed were two hotels, the post-office—with all its records—a furniture store, a United Church and a telephone exchange. Most of the buildings were wooden.

Cause of the fire was not known.

Warm Welcome Given Houde

Montreal, Aug. 19 (CP) — Thousands of Montrealers were present at Montreal's Windsor station Friday night to welcome Camillien Houde, former mayor of the city, home after four years internment camps. It was an equally large crowd had gathered at the same station to greet the home to swell him there.

Mr. Houde, 64, is a former but in good health and cheerful, had lost none of his flair for oratory and addressed the crowd over the public address system.

"I want to tell the people of this English language present hire and those who have read about this in the newspapers that I have not been the victim of British fair play," he said. "I was only the victim of a political party and a political organization and political clique. Some day I will meet the English people and they will tell them know the truth and they will know that I was right."

The crowd in front of the station and before his home cheered wildly as Mr. Houde spoke on the microphone.

"What the future has in store for me, I do not know, but there is one thing you can be sure of. It is that I will always fight for right."

Earlier, in an interview, Mr. Houde said he had no immediate plans for entering politics but he added: "For the present I will be a listener—for me was waiting events —such as the end of the war, a Federal election or Gerrymander or the provincial political field "which could bring a great change."

Crew of Plane Decorated For Sinking 2 Subs

With the R.C.A.F. in Coastal Command, England, Aug. 19 (CP)—In the Mediterranean Sea, 100 miles off the Algerian coast, a Sunderland flying boat of No. 10 Squadron, R.C.A.F., Coastal Command, was patrolling on convoy escort duty.

Suddenly the flying boat's captain, Flying Officer Ralph Edwards, D.F.C., of Vancouver, saw a U-boat. He had already sighted another U-boat that had been sighted by the Sunderland's sister ship, a Liberator, and had attacked it. Edwards' U-boat also had been attacked by the Liberator and was damaged.

The captain won the immediate award of a D.S.O. for Messrs. it was revealed, and described how he and his crew, among them a Distinguished Service Cross for Flight Sergeant W. P. Foster, wireless operator/air gunner, Dundas, Ontario.

Immediate D.F.M.'s had previously been awarded to two other crew members — F/O. A. J. Smith, navigator, of Vancouver, and W.O. M. W. Wetsiat, wireless operator-air gunner of Rockston, Man.

Other Canadian members of the crew were F/O. J. M. Ketcheson, second pilot, Toronto, and W.O. S. D. M. Grose and F/S. R. Davidson, wireless operator-air gunners, from Toronto and Ottawa. Davidson and Grose each receive a mention in despatches.

During the beachhead landings this crew's job was to patrol the Mediterranean off the beaches one night they sighted a U-boat which never got into the landing lower. Despite the sub's fire, the Sunderland dropped a stick of depth charges, blowing her right out of the water. The Liberator men saw pieces of the U-boat falling from top before she sank.

Immediately after the attack the crew saw the submarine listing badly, and a few minutes later saw her rise to a 70-degree angle, then slide forward into the sea. The crew's survivors were counted clinging to life rafts.

As a result of the awards, the Canadians and their R.A.F. comrades in the Liberator are the most-decorated crew in Coastal Command.

Explosions Indicate Germans Demolishing Port Installations

Folkestone, England, Aug. 19 (CP) —A series of violent explosions in France during the night and morning indicated that the Germans are fulfilling their scorched earth policy, it was reported tonight.

Villagers along the Channel, who for four years ago were apprehensive that Hitler's scorched earth policy now are watching and listening to the war to the Germans in the manner of a man trying to follow a football game played in a blackout at midnight.

There is a great deal of guessing what each blast means, everything leads to the conclusion the port is being rapidly rendered along the coast of France.

Nazis Use Huge, New Armored Tank

London, Aug. 19 — (CP)— The Germans have thrown a huge new, heavily armored tank into action on both the Russian and northern French fronts in an effort to stem the Allied advance, it was first reports denied it was a "super weapon."

One of the new monsters weighing more than 60 tons, and with an armor plate—1½ inches thicker than anything the enemy yet has used, was knocked out under British forces on the Orne river front.

The tank was a victim of a mechanical breakdown and never got fired a shot in battle.

Christened the "Panziger" by its captors, the tank combines the best features of the German Tiger and Panther tanks.

The Panziger, 23 feet long and more than 11' feet wide, has an extra track on each side of the tracks and a huge, clumsy looking turret.

95 P. C. Spies, Sent To Liberated Italy, Are Rounded Up

Rome, Aug. 18. (AP)—Allied authorities announce 95 per cent of the Italian spies sent into Italy by the Germans to liberated Italy have been rounded up.

The announcement yesterday said that "a great blow" had been made by "the cynical disregard displayed by the Germans for the lives of the spies" whom they employed.

Sixteen of those arrested have been executed, many more have been sentenced to death, and a large number still are awaiting trial.

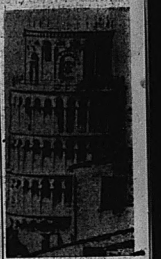
INVASION TROOPS AND SHIPS PICTURED AS LATEST ALLIED INVASION OF SOUTHERN FRANCE TAKES PLACE



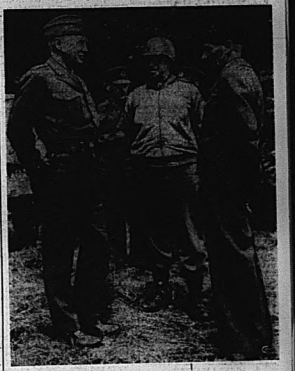
Here is a view of part of the great Allied invasion fleet, numbering some 900 ships, that put British, American and French troops ashore on the south coast of France to open up still another front.

A picture sent by radio showing Allied infantrymen who took part in the invasion of Southern France, kneeling as they received holy communion on the beach before boarding their invasion craft. Invasion fleets came from Italy, Corsica, Africa and Sardinia.

STILL STANDS

This photograph, taken after Nazi Goebbels announced destruction of the famous leaning tower of Pisa in Italy by Allied shells, proves that the famed structure still stands as un-straight as ever.

A picture radioed to the United States, showing the jump master (standing) giving final instructions to this group of paratroopers, as the C-47 of the troop carrier air division of the 12th Air Force takes the men to their dropping zone in Southern France.



A view of the little seaside town of Bormes, France, some 20 miles east of the great port and naval base of Toulon in Southern France, which, according to the German radio, was one of the places where Allied troops landed.

SUB CAUGHT IN NUTCRACKER

"The sub twisted and turned like a scared rabbit . . . eventually an explosion was seen and the U-boat sank quickly in a smother of foam," said crew members of a Canadian Coastal Command flying boat, describing how they successfully attacked a German pig-boat off Iceland recently. The above photograph was taken just after the aircraft passed over the submarine on its first run. Note the plums from the charge exploding on the far side and the "quivers" of the two depth charges entering the water on the near side, indicating that the submarine was caught between the explosions. Enemy gun crews previously had been swept from the decks by intense and accurate machine gun fire from the Canadian aircraft, F/O. Tommy Cooke, D.F.C., of Clinton, Ont., and Dauphin, Man., was captain, and F/O. Bert Hunter, of Langley, B.C., co-pilot.—(R.C.A.F. Operational Photo.)

PATTON CONFERS WITH ALLIED CHIEFS

It is revealed that Lieut.-Gen. George S. Patton, Jr., is the leader of the American armored spearheads that have been chewing the Germans on the Breton peninsula and are now closing the trap on the Nazis in the Vire bulge. Gen. Patton is shown, left, with Lieut.-Gen. Omar Bradley, centre, commander of all American forces in France, and Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery, commander-in-chief of all Allied forces in France under Gen. Eisenhower.

PEACE IN THE SUN BUT WAR IS CLOSE

Sergt. Edward Watson, of Terre Haute, Indiana, and Paule Marie Truffert, 17-year-old French girl, pore over their English-French dictionary between swims at Cherbourg, France. The sergeant's fighting gear is within easy reach for the war is not very far away, in spite of this peaceful scene.

R.C.A.F. DEVELOPS NEW OXYGEN VALVE

After nearly three years of research, technicians of the Royal Canadian Air Force have developed a valve which supplies oxygen for high altitude combat, according to an airman's requirements. The higher the airman flies, the more oxygen he needs, but zooming and diving at terrific speed, gaining or losing thousands of feet in a matter of seconds, a pilot has no time to fiddle with control dials. The new R.C.A.F. valve is automatically controlled by the flyer's breathing while a metal bellows which expands and contracts according to altitude, regulates the mixture of air and oxygen fed to his lungs. The demand valve, to which the arrow points in the above photograph, weighs 14 ounces, just half the size and weight of inferior types used by the German Luftwaffe. —(R.C.A.F. Photo.)

CANADIANS BLAST ENEMY U-BOAT

These smiling members of a crack R.C.A.F. squadron stationed in Iceland, sighted and attacked a German U-boat after a gun duel in which they pitted a pair of light calibre machine guns against the enemy's cannon . . . and won. The Canadian lads were engaged in a routine flight, gathering "gen" on the weather when they spotted the German submarine. After a perfect straddle of depth charges had been dropped, only wreckage and acres of oil marked the place where the sub had been. From LEFT to RIGHT they are: Flight Sergeant Earl Tilander, Wireless-Air-Gunner, 18 Rhyl Ave., Toronto; Flying Officer Bert Hunter, co-pilot, Langley, B.C.; Flying Officer Tommy Cooke, D.F.C., pilot, Clinton, Ont., and Dauphin, Man.; Warrant Officer G. McMacken, who manned the aircraft's machine guns, 290 Furby St., Winnipeg; Flight Lieutenant Eric Wilson, navigator, Island Falls, Ont.; and Flying Officer Peter Peat, Wireless-Air-Gunner, Port William.—(R.C.A.F. Manitowaning, Ont., Aug. 18. (CP)—Mrs. Alice Rankin, 41, Detroit, was killed and five companions, all United States tourists, were seriously burned when a gasoline tank on a motor launch exploded Wednesday night on Manitowaning Bay on Manitoulin Island, Lake Huron.

The injured in hospital here are: Mr. and Mrs. Ferman Henn, Dayton, O., and their daughter, Jacqueline, 20; Mrs. Gladys Smith, 46, Detroit, and Paddy Lewis, an Indian guide of Manitowaning.

The holiday party was being towed back to port here after rudder trouble when the tank blew up. The four women were thrown out of the launch. They were rescued along with the men by the tow launch.

AMERICANS THREATEN TO ENCIRCLE PARIS TOULON ALMOST ISOLATED BY FRENCH TROOPS

Armored Columns Spread on Both Sides of Capital

French Underground Army Stages Fierce Revolt in City

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 21 —(CP)— U. S. armored columns spread on both the fringes of Paris today and Allied flags were reported already flying in many parts of the capital as the French underground army staged a fierce revolt in anticipation of early liberation.

American tanks established a firm bridgehead across the Seine at Mantes, 25 miles northwest of Paris, opening a path to the flying bomb coast 90 miles farther north.

Invasion of the territory north of the Seine at Mantes threatened to compress further the 75-mile-long, 50-mile-deep corner south of the river where elements of 18 Nazi divisions were fighting frantically to escape from a succession of pockets with the hope of crossing a German bridgehead across an almost bridgeless Seine.

Canadians Make Attacks.

Madly charging into a Canadian hand of steel, the Germans made violent efforts yesterday to break out of a mid-Normandy trap, but the disciplined said, and were smashed back by the combined efforts of 1st Canadian Army troops and rocket-firing R.A.F. fighters.

Canadian infantry poured fire over open sights into the pocket below Chambois, 10 miles southeast of Falaise, and the tanks blasted gun and even anti-aircraft guns blasted almost to the muzzles ahead of Germans.

Ross Munro, Canadian Press war correspondent, quoted a senior Canadian staff officer as saying the gobs was "sticky" for a while, but the effort finally was smashed and "nothing substantial got out."

Enemy losses, said Munro, were "terrific," but Canadian casualties so far in the gap-blocking operation had been light.

33 Tanks Destroyed.

Using about 70 tanks scraped up from the elements of five divisions the Germans attacked British troops yesterday westward from the pocket in another battle which raged all night, with the result still doubtful.

Thirty-three tanks were reported destroyed in the two sudden attacks.

While rain slowed Canadian advances, British elements of Gen. Crerar's command crossed the Vire river in real force, heading toward the Seine, and other troops moved forward to within three miles of Lisieux, important communications centre, Livarot, 10 miles southwest of Lisieux, fell to the British forces.

10 Miles From Paris.

These developments came as other elements of the U. S. First Army flushed German elements in the vicinity of Versailles, within 10 miles of the Seine, and established themselves along the Seine south-east of the French capital. Paris itself was said to be awaiting the arrival of Allied soldiers of liberation from German rule.

((The German official D.N.B. agency declared in an broadcast dispatch that "Allied reconnaissance forces are in the suburbs of Paris.")

Another front dispatch, describing furious fighting as trapped Germans around Chambois, said heavy casualties were inflicted on both sides. It said German troops outside the trap attempted to pierce the Allied lines and open a corridor for the Nazis inside.

The first German attempt failed. A second attack was launched from the Gouffern Forest southeast of Chambois.

A British staff officer was quoted in the dispatch as saying: "We do not know yet how many Germans got out, but we know they suffered severe losses".

1,500 Counted Sunday.

More than 7,500 trapped Germans were counted Saturday—3,250 by the British front alone. Supreme headquarters officially announced the capture of Argentan, on the southern edge of the now-closed escape gap — the original Normandy pocket.

The thrust into Cabourg by British troops on the left flank of the Allied offensive, which is hurling Field Marshal Von Kluge's forces back upon the Seine, took the Allied force to about 25 miles along the coast from the mouth of the Seine.

Farther inland British troops of the Canadian army thrust to within three miles of the communications hub of Lisieux, a French dispatch said.

The gigantic Allied drive to envelop Von Kluge's crushed forces also threatened the battered German columns into a 75-mile-wide area between Vernon, on the Seine 45 miles northwest of Paris, and Gacheray.

Greater Stakes in View.

The fall of Paris appeared inclusive. The U. S. Seventh army and its ill-fated reinforcements from the 15th Army Allied officers said, "we're shaking the tree to uproot the German army, not particularly for the fruit".

Unconfirmed reports reaching headquarters from the field said two American correspondents were killed and three others were wounded or captured trying to get to Paris.

A dispatch from the Spanish border reported the Germans were fleeing north in efforts to get out of France, and that Germans were abandoning all of France south of Paris.

Taking advantage of bad weather, the Germans are trying to flee across the Seine between Mantes and the Pas de Calais along four crossings between Rouen and the sea, 35 airline miles away, R.A.F. Mosquitos attacked their escape attempts in that area last night.

Flee From Pocket to Pocket.

The British first tactical air force and the U.S. 9th air force, operating from the British left flank in the area from Pernay and Lisieux to the Seine, destroyed 1,500 vehicles in the past week. This did not include the destruction in the original Falaise-Argentan gap smash which now is being handled by Allied artillery as it is too small and broken up for air force operation.

Von Kluge's armies are fleeing from pocket to pocket. With the Falaise-Argentan gap closed, the Germans now are on the south of the Seine and are being hammered on every side. The news of the Allied crossing at Mantes means that even if the Germans get across the Seine they are in no position to be trapped by Lt.-Gen. Patton's 3rd army men, its direct junction with the forces on Paris. The Germans were fanning out 30 miles to the south to counter American patrols. There were reports the Germans were underground were engaging the Germans in the streets of the capital.

Flashing News.

The American sweep across the Seine at Mantes was flashed to the push to positions to the south-east threatens to envelop the German forces in a huge pocket unfordable position where it will have to fall.

ALLIED AIRMEN STRAFING HUNS CROSSING SEINE

Nazis Using Barges Reportedly Salvaged From Abortive Drive To Invade England

1,500 BEING USED

By GLADWEN HILL
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 21 —(AP)— R.A.F. Mosquitos and Mitchells raced up and down the Seine river throughout last night, bombing and strafing Nazi river bank troop concentrations and low-flying barges across the 200-yard water barrier which threatens the escape routes of Allied armies in France.

The Nazis' four principal crossings at Louviers, Duclair, Caudebec and Quilleboeuf, were hammered in the fifth straight level attack on the record scourge from the skies today swept into its fifth day, despite handicapping weather.

A line of barges existing for the crossing of a great river, reportedly salvaged from the abortive 1940 campaign to invade England was plastered near Quilleboeuf. American fighter bombers in daylight and evening attacks knocked out 30 others.

A simultaneous night-long attack on the belt west of the Seine, through which the beaten Nazis are streaming from the Falaise trap, knocked out 136 vehicles and 16 tanks to bring the day's total for both the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. and U.S. 9th Air Force to more-than 350 vehicles and nearly 50 tanks.

1,200 to 1,500 Being Used.

The original total barge force upon which the Germans are depending to get their miniature Dunkerque over the bridgeless river was estimated at 1,200 to 1,500. The Germans also have used hinge-type craft, which can be turned back against the shrub-shrouded river bank in the daytime, and 214 other craft susceptible to sweeping.

The attacks are taking place a scant 25 miles down the Seine from the American bridgehead.

Rocket-firing Spitfire and Typhoon pilots destroyed or damaged more than 100 motor vehicles in four days this weekend attacks on the remnants of the German 15th Army.

In addition, the U. S. 8th Air Force fighter bombers and R.A.F. Typhoons destroyed or damaged included 870 locomotives, 1,728 railway cars, 1,245 road vehicles and 281 armored vehicles.

1,728 Tanks Destroyed.

R.A.F. fighter bombers alone reported destroying 1,728 tanks and damaged yesterday.

Four squadrons of rocket firing Typhoons did a neat precision job, breaking up the German effort to launch rafts and barges in an attack on assault by 20 to 30 massed tanks toward Trun.

Organization of Peace Must Be Backed By Force Says Cordell Hull

Washington, Aug. 21. (CP)—State Secretary Cordell Hull opened the history-making task of world security talks today with a declaration the organization of peace must be backed by force "available promptly, in adequate measure, and with certainty".

His assertion in a prepared address indicated the United States is entering the four-power meetings with plans for strong commitments on the use of its own forces in support of world security for generations to come.

His statement followed by British representative, appealed for the British, American, Soviet and Chinese governments to act speedily in erecting a world peace structure in order to get some of it working before the war ends.

He evidently referred to the British proposal that at a minimum the big-four nations should bind themselves together now in some sort of provisional council until a permanent organization can be formed.

Gather at Dumbarton Oaks.

The delegates were gathered at Dumbarton Oaks, historic Washington estate, where all their meetings are to be held.

Speaking for President Roosevelt as well as himself, Mr. Hull as official head of the state session—the first international meeting to blockout a security organization since formal work started on the ill-fated League of Nations 26 years ago. Sir Alexander and Ambassador Andrei Gromyko, Soviet representative, spoke in respond to Mr. Hull, who has turned over the leading American role to Under-Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius, Jr.

Sir British and American spokesman sought to reassure small countries as to their position in the projected world family.

Sir Alexander said of the large-power opposition issue that our problem is to construct a machine which will give to each of these responsibilities commensurate with its powers."

Sir Alexander said he thought the Dumbarton meeting should concentrate on principles rather than details of organization and should keep constantly in mind that it is not the exact kind of organization so much as the will of countries to co-operate which in the end will ensure peace.

Must Have Growth.

He said: "We must remember that peace, in the negative sense of cessation of war, is not enough. No world system can endure unless it permits of growth and unless it

MAQUIS CAPTURE TOULOUSE SAYS ALGIERS RADIO

French Patriots Now Control One-Third of France

LAVAL AT BELFFORT

London, Aug. 21 (CP)—The Algiers radio said today that on Sunday the Maquis captured Toulouse, sixth largest city of France.

Toulouse (Pop. 213,200) is in southwest France, 80 miles north of the Spanish border. Frequent broadcasts from Algiers say that German withdrawals from that area.

French Patriots now control one-third of France controlling eight police departments, says Gen. Joseph Koenig, commander of the French forces of the interior.

In a communique broadcast by the Algiers radio Gen. Koenig said that during the week ended Aug. 14 French Patriots killed 1,821 Germans, wounded 415 and captured 2,265, suffering only slight losses themselves.

Reports relayed here through Port Bou, Spain said the Maquis controlled the entire Provence region of southeastern France from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean. All German forces but remnants of the Spanish border have withdrawn northward and Pierre Laval has been appointed new civil administrator.

A dispatch from Paris, dated the last German troops at Hendaye, just across the border in France, have pulled out and only certain French customs men guarded the frontier.

In Control of Vichy.

(The Brazzaville radio said in a broadcast reported yesterday by NBC that Maquis forces were in control at Vichy. The broadcast added that Gestapo agents had moved from Vichy and Paris to Nancy.)

French-Swiss border reports said there is great alarm among Vichy officials had arrived at Belfort, near both Switzerland and Germany, and that Laval had established headquarters in a Chateau 10 miles outside Belfort.

Marshal Petain's whereabouts was a mystery. A dispatch reported by the London Daily Mail said he was believed still at Vichy, residing in the Pavillon De Sevigne to hand over his powers to the body he will be called upon to represent the new France. The Ankara radio said Petain was expected at Belfort.

(After his arrival in France yesterday, Gen. Charles De Gaulle, head of the French Committee of National Liberation, made a speech from the Cherbourg city hall that "we are all united in the same will —the will to French greatness.")

CANADIAN-POLISH BARRIER BLOCKING TRUN STILL HOLDS

Disorganized Attempt by Germans to Break Through Repulsed

2,300 PRISONERS

By ROSS MUNRO

With the 1st. Canadian Army In France, Aug. 21 (Cable) —A fresh, disorganized attempt to break through the Canadian-Polish barrier blocking the Trun gap has been smashed by the combined efforts of 1st. Canadian Army troops and artillery.

The German thrust was made yesterday with a hastily scraped-together force which tried to break through the gap between Trun and Chambois on a front about a mile wide. It was the fourth last their weight to the Nazi punch.

Enemy losses piled up as Canuck artillery and rocket-firing R.A.F. Typhoons poured devastating fire into the enemy ranks. A German corps commander was captured by French troops operating with the Canadian army yesterday numbering at least 2,300, to bring the bag to between 4,000 and 8,000 since Falaise fell four days ago.

The 1st. Canadian Army headquarters that there still is fighting in the Trun area, and that the enemy still is trying to force his way out.

The German force which tried the break-through had support for their effort from a tank force which met the barrier where a tank-led Nazi force was smashed two days ago.

This outside force massed north-east of Trun, was disorganized and was taken on by the R.A.F. who accounted for 13 tanks there. The gunning was what a senior Canadian officer called "sticky" for a while, but the effort finally was smashed and "nothing substantial got out."

While enemy troops were being rolled up on the Canadian front, British troops under Lt.-Gen. Crerar's command were fighting within three miles of the important communications centre of Lisieux, a French dispatch said. Fighting was reported between Les Moenil-Mauger and Le Mesnil-Durand.

The 1st. Canadian Army is now across the Vire River in real force, heading toward the Seine and control was captured and Canadian armored units are spearheading a drive to Lisieux.

Heavy rain which began during the night, turning the roads into muck, could only slow the Canadians' advance, but not to the Germans' advantage.

Open-Sight Firing

But Canadian artillery in open-sight firing from positions gained through the capture of Falaise was slaughtering German troops herded along the Falaise-Chambois road like fish frightened cattle in a pen.

"The bag is enormous," the pocket is continuing. It is being reduced hourly," said a Canadian officer.

RUSSIANS SMASH 3 NAZI DIVS. IN SANDOMIERZ TRAP

In Warsaw Sector Reds Drive Closer To Praga, Suburb Of The East of City

55 MILES FROM RIGA

By EDDY GILMORE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Aug. 21 —(AP)— Soviet forces have smashed three Nazi divisions in the Sandomierz salient south of Warsaw, while other Red army units have yielded slightly before costly German attempts to rescue 100,000 troops isolated on the Baltic fronts, a Russian communique announced today.

Front dispatches said, meanwhile, Russian troops have driven closer to Praga, suburb to the east of the city, and have captured several vital positions to the northeast, front dispatches said.

Marshal I. S. Konev's 1st Ukraine Army, thrusting up the west bank of the Vistula, inundated the trapped Germans north of Sandomierz. "As the enemy refused to surrender, 3 divisions of the enclosed enemy troops were killed," the Russian communique declared.

Capture Three Districts.

The victory freed Konev's forces for a possible drive either southwest on the rail fortress of Krakow, north toward Lodz, or northwest across the Polish plains toward Germany. Lodz would envelop the Polish capital's communication lines.

The eighth Red army reverse occurred in the Zelgava sector near the Gulf of Riga, where 144 German tanks and self-propelled guns were reported knocked out.

In Estonia, Gen. Ivan Maslenikov's 3rd Baltic Army, capturing the town of Tapa, continued to drove to within seven miles of Narva on the Estonian-Russian border.

South of the Estonian sector in Latvia Gen. Andrei Yeremenko's 2nd Baltic Army's sweeping up more than 70 places, advanced to within 30 miles west of Riga with the capture of Erglin on the Madona-Riga railway.

The Russian war bulletin said Red army troops have wrecked more than 1,500 German tanks in the fighting on the Polish plains, in Latvia, Estonia, East Prussia and in the Baltic republics in the last nine days.

Berlin, Aug. 21 —(CP)— The German communique said today that Nazi troops "maintain positions west of Tukums in Latvia and have established contact with troops to the Baltic west of Riga and "reestablished temporary land contact" with the rear of an German divisions in Latvia and Estonia.

Berlin declared the Germans established local reverses in that sector, but said the situation generally had been cut. The force of up to 300,000 Germans were severed from the rest of the German army 10 days ago. The Germans said a naval flotilla aided the tank thrust.

The Germans asserted also the Russians had driven a third bridgehead across the broad Vistula river west of Kazimierz, 75 miles south of Warsaw and 35 miles east of Radom.

American Infantry Within 15 Airline Miles of Marseille

Head for Rhone Valley Against Disorganized Foe

By NOLAND NORGAARD
(A.P. Staff Writer)

Rome, Aug. 21 (AP) — Hard driving French troops virtually ordered to a halt by breaking through to within three miles of the naval base while American infantry, within 15 airline miles of Marseille, fanned out today through the Durance Valley and headed for the Rhone against disorganized enemy resistance.

The Americans sped forward on both sides of the town of Pertuis, 11 miles north of Aix-En-Provence across the Durance River, and joined French patriots who had surrounded Nazi troops within the city.

Another of Maj.-Gen. Alexander M. Patch's infantry units charged on several miles to the northeast of Aix, key junction of seven highways 15 miles north of Marseille. Another unit was last reported on the outskirts of Aix and today possibly had complete occupation of that town.

Say Toulon Shelled

(The German radio said Allied warships shelled Toulon Sunday. It claimed hits on one of "several" battleships and one of nine cruisers in the attacking fleet by Nazi shore batteries, which, it was claimed, also struck a destroyer and torpedo boat.)

A dispatch from Joseph Dynan, Associated Press correspondent, said French troops driving on Toulon, said French Commandos, joined with patriot forces and former members of the French navy, were culminating the Nazi rout just north of Toulon.

The Allied garrison in Hyeres, about 8½ miles east of Toulon, was virtually isolated, Dynan said.

The Germans have given no indication of strength or determination to make a real stand in or near the mouth of the Rhone valley.

Disorganization among the Germans indicated the Nazi command had no longer any eventual liquidation of the entire area.

Front Stable in East.

The eastern section of the bridgehead facing toward Cannes and the Italian border remained "generally stable," without reference to new gains.

In most sectors of the rapidly expanding Southern France bridgehead, the Nazis followed effective tactics of by-passing enemy strongpoints.

Among the newest captives were Maj.-Gen. Hans Schubert and his staff of six officers and 30 men. Schubert, chief of the German staff until June, was chief administrative officer, or South-West Area Commander, in charge of Toulouse.

The Nazis defending Toulon were putting up a stiff battle against French infantry and armor on advance from the west, from Hyeres and north.

But other 7th Army units swinging around to the northwestward closed in toward the coast, threatening to cut off the last escape route westward toward Marseille.

CHURCHILL TELLS CANADIANS END OF WAR IS NEARER

Says Enemy Strong and Active and Fighting With Old Efficiency

DECAY IN HOMELAND

By LYNN HEINZERLING
(A.P. War Correspondent)

With the 8th. Army near Florence, Aug. 21 (AP) — Prime Minister Churchill told a brigade of bronzed Canadian lumbmen Sunday that the great battle raging in Normandy promises to bring the end of the war much nearer.

"I cannot tell you as early end to the war, but I could not guarantee sooner than a month that we have allowed ourselves to hope," said the Prime Minister as he faced a great circle of fighting men backed by their Sherman tanks not far from the front lines.

Touring the 8th. Army front with General Sir Harold Alexander, the Prime Minister visited ground where the Allies fought more than a week to push the Germans back on Florence. He wore the uniform of a colonel, an honorary rank.

Many Participated at Diepge

Mr. Churchill today addressed from Gen. Alexander's car to the Canadians in the brigade which played an extremely vital part in smashing through the Gustav and Hitler lines in the Liri Valley. About 100 men before him had participated in the fight at Dieppe in France.

"I am pleased to see you on the grounds which your exertions have conquered and to assure you how closely the minds and hearts of the Canadians in Italy are watched by everyone in the United Kingdom and, of course, in your own beautiful dominion," Mr. Churchill said.

After mentioning his visit to Canada a year ago, he said:

"The same resolute will of everybody and of all parties that was never more strongly involved to continue this righteous war to a victorious conclusion."

Enemy Still Active

"The enemy is still active and strong and his German army still fights with the relics of its old efficiency, behind which lies the weakness and division are spreading," Mr. Churchill said. "The signs of internal decay and dull apathy overtaking the world."

The impression is such that when a general goes to Berlin, he will be "welcomed with open arms" promoted or hanged.

The Nazis have about five minutes. "If the battle now proceeding in Northern France turns out to be the battle of the whole war," he said, "one of the great hopes is that deliverance may not be much nearer."

He said the Canadians "have displayed the qualities of integrity, determination, elasticity and the unity of the commonwealth and empire," he added:

"Neither here or on the fields of Normandy, they are showing that results in the end from which the road to victory is built. God bless you."

The massed troops cheered loudly.

Later he heard a loud noise and upon investigating the cause of the report he was surprised to find the side of his motor car had been badly damaged. The culprits are now looking for a hit-and-run driver, whose motor vehicle must also be damaged along the side as the result of the impact. Mr. Dulmage informed provincial police of the hit-and-run accident, adding he was of the opinion the vehicle responsible for the extensive damage to his car must have been driven at a terrific rate of speed and in a southerly direction towards Belleville.

BUSH AND GRASS FIRE ENDANGERED SALEM CH.

Dense clouds of smoke arising from a bush and grass fire on the First Concession of Ameliasburg, near the Salem Church, gave cause for some concern to farmers of the district on Sunday.

It is believed that an RCAF training bomber lost a smoke bomb from its racks while enroute to the bombing grounds a mile away and ignited dry undergrowth.

The fire spread rapidly through a small woods, causing some damage to fences over a fairly large area.

Dry grass quickly ignited adding to the danger. The area affected, however, was not in the vicinity of any farmhouses or other buildings.

Fire Destroys Charles Striker's Barn in Sidney

Starting in the straw mow when a ball of fire rolled from the threshing machine blower, the large barn on the property of Mr. Chas. Striker, 5th Concession of Sidney Township, together with approximately 1,000 bushels of threshed grain and the season's crop of oats was totally burned late Saturday afternoon.

The threshing machine had all but completed the season's threshing at the Striker farm and with both mows full of hay and straw, the machine had been pulled outside the stable barn floor to be filled with straw. As the machine again started to run the fire was fanned by the blower into the loose straw and quickly got beyond control. There is no loss on the barn basement, and some hens in a nearby henpen which also fell prey to the flames were burned.

Of the season's entire crop only two loads of oats were saved from the flames. These were on wagons at the time the fire broke out. The Strikers intended to winter approximately 50 head of stock.

The threshing separator, owned by Leo Mulvihill, Consecon, Sidney, was also slightly damaged by the fire. Before it could be gotten away from the barn the heat had melted the blower pipe to the ground.

Kinsmen Club Wins Expansion Trophy at Regina

Members of the Belleville Kinsmen Club expansion committee saw their efforts of past two years rewarded by the national body during the national Kinsmen convention at Regina last week when President "Matt" Curry of the local club was presented with the Long Expansion Trophy as reward for formation of most new clubs in Canada during the past fiscal year.

During the past year the Belleville club has been instrumental in Kinsmen clubs being formed in Trenton, Napanee, Picton and Tweed. This feat was unequalled by any other club across Canada.

Present at the Kinsmen convention at Regina were President "Matt", George O'Brien and Bert Farrar of the local club. The Belleville delegation were the only representatives from Eastern Ontario.

Big success with Don Forrest at Montreal being elected as the new national president.

Referring to the Long Expansion Trophy awarded to the local club at the national convention, Belleville members indicated that this was the finest national trophy ever won by the Belleville club.

Decoration Day At Two Cemeteries Held by Veterans

More impressive by the presence of a large gathering of youthful veterans of the present war, the annual Decoration Day ceremonies of First Great War veterans attracted a large crowd of friends and relatives at the Belleville and St. James' cemeteries yesterday.

Held under the auspices of Belleville Branch No. 201 Army and Navy Veterans of Canada, the ceremonies commenced at 2.30 p.m. Preceding the parade, which was formed in Victoria Park, the colorful gladioli, marigolds, and zinnias into compositions.

Against the beautiful green setting of the Belleville Cemetery, members of Canada's fighting divisions of the last war, stood attention for the singing of the hymn by the youth of the present struggle, and bowed their heads in a two-minutes' silence to the memory of fallen comrades.

The brief ceremony was presided over by President York. Prayer was uttered by Captain Brown of the Salvation Army with the Last Post and Reveille being sounded by Bandsman Jack Green of the Salvation Army Band here.

Following the service, veterans dispersed to place memorial bouquets on the last resting places of fallen comrades. A large crowd of civilians attended the ceremonies. Wreaths of the late veterans placed individual floral tributes on the graves of their loved ones.

Horse Burned In Livery Barn

Enveloped in flames before it could be removed to safety, or rescued by a five-year-old horse burned to death on Saturday in a fire which gutted the livery barn owned by Harry Brown, blacksmith, situated south of the Dundas Street entrance building on Front Street.

The horse was stabled in the building while its owner, James Hutchings, Redmersville, was away selling gladioli on the market. Other horses owned by Fred Mossman were saved from the blaze. Brewery delivery horses, which are stabled in the same building, were shod in the brown blacksmith shop at the time the fire was discovered.

J. Chadsey, Brown's helper, rushed into the stable and succeeded in removing the Mossman horses but the swiftly moving flames drove him back when he attempted to reach the Hutchings' horse.

Tried to Save Animal.

Hutchings, also endeavored to save his animal, but it was enveloped in flames by the time he entered and he in turn was driven out by the extreme heat.

The building, an old stone structure reinforced with corrugated iron, contained a quantity of hay the property of Brown, the Weston Bakery, Brewery Warehouse officials and others. Dry straw and salvaged paper were also stored in the loft.

Brown and his helper, Champagne were working in the stable when, due to the east end of the barn, when Ray Cornrod dashed inside and shouted "Fire." Flames and smoke were issuing from the barn when the smith reached there. A thick stone partition between the smithy and the barn, prevented smoke from entering the former.

Confined by the stone walls the fire swept rapidly through the dry hay and contents of the barn. The firemen laid about five lengths of hose and fought the stubborn blaze for two hours before finally getting it under control.

Reg. Hinchey March Played At Band Concert

American armed services melodies, with which Canadians have become familiar since the war, were heard in a stirring medley at the fifth of the series of concerts given on the Armouries lawn by the Belleville Municipal Band on Sunday night.

Bellerville's own Reg. Hinchey, top flight Canadian band music composer and arranger, whose first four melodies into a tuneful whole that was given a splendid reception by music lovers.

The new march, aptly titled "American Service" starts off with a few bars of the Star-Spangled Banner then deftly swings into the stirring notes of the "Marine Hymn". The popular "Army Air Corps" theme tune is then heard followed by the melody that stirs all gunner hearts, the "U. S. Field Artillery" or more popularly known as "The Caisson Go Rolling Along." The melodic climax comes with the U. S. Navy tune, that is familiar the world over, "Anchor's Aweigh."

The march is skillfully played by the band and is cleverly played by Lieut. Fred Jobson and his musicians.

The band gave an excellent performance of the other musical numbers that completed the program. Other stirring marches were "Songs of the Southland," and other selections offering a non-balanced musical variety.

There is a fitting "finis" to a well arranged Sunday night program, the band offered the new hymn tune "Hymn of the Royal Navy," "Eternal Father, Strong to Save."

The concert was played on the west lawn of the Armouries and enjoyed by a large appreciative crowd.

ORGANIZATION

tends to promote the well-being of humanity as a whole. Hence, however, we may let the various non-political world organizations into our general system, we must insist that they remain always whereby the expanding force of modern scientific invention shall not be a destructive rather than into disstructive channels . . . .

"We must not forget that acute discomfort in the economic and social field will constantly hamper the smooth operation of the best political plans. In other words, freedom from fear and freedom from want must so far as human nature will permit, go hand in hand simultaneously."

He said the "working party" from the United Kingdom was recruited from the official level and said it was pointed that "so far as we are concerned, these talks are necessarily exploratory and non-committal."

"It cannot be emphasized too often." Mr. Hull said, "that the principle of sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, irrespective of size and strength, as partners in a system of order under law, must constitute the foundation of any future international organization for the maintenance of peace and security.

Must Be Backed By Force.

"It must be said that the unity of effort which is now driving the United Nations to victory and only through continued unity can the peace-loving nations "assure for themselves and their posterity progress, with freedom and justice."

He continued: "It is generally agreed that any peace and security organization would surely fail unless backed by force to be used immediately in case of failure of all other means for the maintenance of peace.

"That force must be available promptly for adequate measures and with certainty. The nations of the world should maintain, according to their capacities, sufficient forces available for joint action to prevent any imminent breaches of the peace."

Mr. Hull said it was the American intention that, after the Anglo-American-Chinese talks immediately following these sessions with the Russians, the conclusions reached at Dumbarton Oaks should be circulated among all the United Nations and "as soon as practicable" should be given out to all people "for public study and debate."

When they arrived they found the man to be bleeding from a gash in the head, and nose with a severe cut on his left eye. They aroused him sufficiently to get his name as Joseph Cannon, Charles St., but that seemed all he could remember. He was rushed by ambulance to Belleville Hospital.

Police continued their investigation, and found there had been a fight at Cannon's home and one man, believed to have taken part, has been taken into custody. It is probable other arrests will follow. In the meantime Cannon is progressing favorably in hospital.

Police found two women and two men immediately sitting on the railway tracks seemingly at the height of hilariousness. Also found in their possession were flowers, which are alleged to have been taken from nearby private flower gardens. Substantial fines were assessed the entire quartette when they were liberated with warnings against such practices in the future.

Otherwise activities in local police circles were quite quiet during the over the weekend although several infractes fell afoul of the law and were dealt with accordingly. The combined $13 could be raised and paid to assure liberation.

Davis Brothers Meet in France

Eighteen-year-old Sapper Robert E. Davis didn't look up at first when a husky dirt-grimed private of the Caneron Highlanders of Ottawa, spoke to him during a heavy action in France the other day. For one thing, the young engineer was too busy, and another thing, he did not know too many soldiers in the Cameron's.

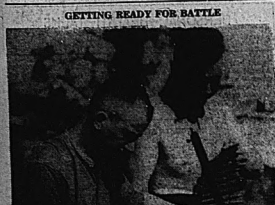
But he looked up with a smile when a familiar voice spoke to him. It was his brother, Pte. Fred Davis, of Ottawa, Billies, and they hadn't seen each other for over a year. Mrs. Minnie Davis, mother of the duo, resides at 150 South Church Street.

The lads are members of a fighting family. Another brother, Ernest is a private in the Canadian Provost Corps at Kingston. Three brothers-in-law are also in the armed services. These include, Petty Officer, Sam. Campbell, RCN; Private Mac. Stafford, Camp Borden, and Flight Sergeant Carmen Osborne of the RCAF.

The youthful sapper has been overseas for over a year, enlisting when he was slightly past his seventeenth birthday. He has been in action for some time.

"GOD BLESS CANADA"

The Third Printing of this musical composition by Mr. and Mrs. Ira M. James, Belleville, Ontario, is now off the press and is ready for distribution by the publishers, THE JAMES TEXTS, BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO.



Certain minor changes in wording and musical emphasis through the kind assistance of well known musical experts have placed this already famous composition in the class of masterpieces.

"God Save the King" is an Empire anthem. "God Bless Canada" may become a Canadian anthem.

Family Welcomes Lt. S. McBride On His Return From Action in Italy

Suffers Amputation of Left Leg Following Wounding by Shrapnel

IN TANK CORPS

A youthful, battle-scarred hero of the "battlefields of Italy" bounded from a hospital train that brought 22 fellow soldiers from overseas to Kingston Sunday night.

Hundreds of relatives, friends and well-wishers mingled enthusiastic applause with the welcoming strains of a band as the young war-proved veterans of Europe's bloodstained fields had the first sight of loved ones—some of them for over three years.

The young soldier, minus a leg, looked anxiously over the crowd. His face lighted up as he saw a small group, and a minute later Lieutenant S. M. (Stew) McBride was reunited with his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. McBride, 26 Foster Avenue, and other members of his family.

In Drive on Casino

"Stew" got part of the full force of a Nazi shrapnel shell while operating his tank in the drive for Cassino, Italy. Pellets ripped up his left side, inflicting compound fractures of the left leg and left arm. So serious were the leg wounds, that amputation was necessary. At first it was feared that the arm would suffer a like fate, but "stew" attributes the fact that his arm will be saved due to splendid care and prompt hospitalization.

Over there in hospital they called "Stew" the "human goldmine." Doctor treated him with eight injections of penicillin daily for fourteen days. And this at a cost of $480 daily. It was then that his favorite doctor jokingly gave him the nickname.

Another incident that did much toward his ultimate recovery occurred during his days in hospital.

Visited by Brother

During the "darker" days, Stew awakened to find a familiar face, one he had not seen in three years bending over him. It was that of his brother Bill, now a sergeant pilot with the Canadian Air Force, and who had obtained leave to see his wounded brother. For three days and three nights the reunited McBrides ate, talked and slept together. Kindly hospital authorities arranged for Bill to remain with Stew, and the end of the brief leave saw the young officer happier than he had been for some time.

"Stew" was sent to Kingston Military Hospital after the thrill of seeing his family was over. He will remain there for further treatment, and in all likelihood be sent to Christie Street Hospital where he will undergo further operations.

He appeared to be more interested in the absence of a tooth rather than the more important phases of his physical condition. Questioned by his mother as to why the molar was missing, Stew smiled and said: "I was playing ball with the regimental team when another officer attempted to bat out a home run. Instead, he batted me right into hospital."

Over Three Years Overseas.

"Stew" was a member of the 1st (R) Battalion, Argyll Light Infantry, forty years ago. He went overseas and was one of the Brockville Officers' Training Centre members to emerge with the "pips" of an officer on his shoulders. He was sent to Camp Borden where he was transferred to the British Columbia Dragoons, armor crack cavalry regiment, and then a unit of the Canadian Armored Corps. It was with the C.A.C. that "Stew" served at the front, and at the time of the wounding. He has been overseas for over three years.

Always Active in Sports.

Lieut. McBride was educated in the public schools of Belleville and Belleville, always being keenly active in school sports. "Stew" played football and hockey while attending public school and later starred as a line-plunging back fielder for the strong 1938-39 senior intermediate football teams of the Belleville Collegiate Institute and along with his brother Bill (Warrant Officer McBride was also in making many substantial gains for the Collegiate) was selected one season of Ontario Juvenile hockey, doubling in both outfield and goal facilities with an injured ankle. A quiet player on the field of action, Lieut. McBride was one of those "team players" who cooperated heartily with and for the team with but one object in view—victory for the team.

Cruisers Begin Shelling Bayonne Area in S. France

Appears to be Preliminaries of a Landing on the Atlantic Coast

VISIBLE IN SPAIN

Irun, Spain, Aug. 21 (AP)—Three light Allied cruisers began shelling almost non-existent German defences in the Bayonne area on Southern France before dawn today.

Spanish residents of this border town 18 miles to the south had a grandstand seat.

The cruisers which first patrolled the coast south of Bordeaux evidently were feeling out German defences, but drew only an occasional reply from two or three coastal batteries near Bayonne.

South of Bayonne Hitler's so-called Atlantic wall no longer exists for the Germans pulled out last night, leaving their defenses works in ruins.

Encounter No Resistance

An American motorized column, meanwhile was reported to have passed through Arcachon, 130 miles south of Nantes on the Loire River and 165 miles northwest of Bayonne, without encountering resistance. It is 55 miles by road to Spanish frontier.

The three Allied warships were plainly visible from the Spanish coast when the fog veiling their approach lifted.

They shelled the coastline methodically for more than half an hour. Splashes of shells in the water around the cruisers from the light German counter-fire were also seen, but no hits were observed.

The warships ended fire about 7.45 a.m., and disappeared northward.

The War Today—German Disaster in W. Europe Spreads in Paris Theatre and South

By De WITT MacKENZIE
(A. P. War Analyst)

The German disaster in Western Europe has intensified over the weekend, both in the Paris theatre and in Southern France.

One of the most notable developments is the establishment of a bridgehead across the Seine at Mantes, 25 miles northwest of Paris, capital, by the U. S. 3rd. Patton's armored columns. This was achieved while other American units continued their sweep around the south of Paris, the apparent aim to flank the core centre of France.

The cutting of the Seine at Mantes is of vast importance strategically. It means that the remnants of Nazi Field Marshal Von Kluge's battered 7th. Army, which have been retreating toward the Seine from the boundary defeat, now are in a huge bowl-shaped trap where the river and a short stretch of coast southwest of the Seine's mouth.

Bombers Ready to Pounce on Barges

Since all the bridges have been destroyed by the Allied air forces, the only means the Nazis have of escaping is by barges—and our bombers are circling the sky ready to pounce on them.

While this presents a grim picture we shouldn't assume that none of the Germans can escape. Probably considerable numbers already have made the crossing and others will try to do so. Once they're on the northern bank of the Seine they will be out of the pocket. Parts of the Nazi 15th. Army which is holding the Channel coast northward will be terribly costly in men and equipment for the Hitlerites are building an Inner Defences on Rhine Presaged

Moreover, with their right virtually flanked, the Nazis will have difficulty in defending any part of the line of the Seine. If they can't hold this line they will have to fall back or retire northward, taking their English Channel forces with them. In short, the German army in a nasty predicament which presages a wholesale withdrawal to their inner defences on the Rhine. And today's report from Paris tells us that the Hitlerites came last night when the forces which are surrounded in the Falaise Gap in Normandy made a determined attempt to break out. The Canadians took them on, and a fierce battle raged throughout the night with heavy losses on both sides. Dawn found the Canadians the victors and today trapped Nazis are under terrific fire from rocket-firing Typhoons and Canadian artillery.

Cigarette Bank Established In Britain, Normandy

Ottawa, Aug. 21 (CP) — A cigarette supply bank, similar to the one serving troops in the Mediterranean, will be established Monday for Canadian forces in Normandy and Britain, the Post Office authorities announced. Parcels and orders will be filled by drawing on big reserves built up over the last few months by bulk shipments.

Cigarette gifts will continue to be ordered by individuals through their local tobacconist or direct from the tobacco companies, said the announcement. The tobacco companies prepare labels on receipt of orders, complete with postage and particulars, each label covering one parcel of 300 cigarettes. The Post Office then takes over. The labels are recorded and flow overseas to the reserve tobacco depots. There the labels are attached to cartons containing 300 cigarettes by members of the Canadian Postal Corps.

The outstanding feature of the scheme is the protection from loss to the individual of the parcels while en route from the tobacco companies to the supply depots overseas, as the labels, if lost, will be duplicated.

'End of War in Sight; Let's Finish in Record Time'-Monty

With British Troops in France, Aug. 21 (CP)—Gen. Montgomery told his troops tonight:

"The end of the war is in sight. Let us finish it in the shortest possible record time."

Gen. Montgomery's special message said the German armies in northwest France had suffered a decisive defeat.

"There will be many surprises in store for the retreating remnants," he asserted.

Montgomery said the victory had been "definite, complete and decisive."

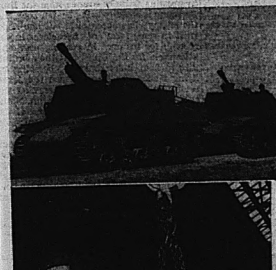
109,575 Germans Made Casualties By Patton's Army

By EDWARD D. BALL
(A.P. War Correspondent)



With the U.S. 3rd. Army in France, Aug. 21 (AP) — Lt.-Gen. Patton's 3rd. Army has inflicted 109,575 casualties on the Germans since August 1, in his dash across Brittany and Northern France to the outskirts of Paris.

The 3rd. Army has captured 49,650, killed 11,035, and wounded an estimated 48,900. The losses constitute a total of about 3 Nazi divisions in their present, depleted state.

Information was lacking today on most of Patton's columns, probing through France like the arms of an octopus.

Refugees slipping from Paris reported street fighting of increasing violence between French resistance forces and the Germans inside the capital.

DEADLY NEW CANADIAN WEAPON REVEALED

Long on the secret list, a powerful new weapon, the Ram tank, a self-propelled mount, has been revealed as the world by Hamilton Minister C. D. Howe. Designed by Canadian and built largely in this country, it has already been made in sufficient quantities to equip the Canadian army, and is now taking made for the British army. A modification of the Canadian-designed Ram tank, the Sexton is already in action in France. The gun for the new mount is virtually the same as the 25-pounder field which slipped Rommel at El Alamein. It is shown being installed into the mount in the lower photo, while above a line of the completed mounts lumbers out to the test ranges.

testing the air over the Moluccas." The communique added that Moluccas chain was being "strategically sterilized and divided into its component links" leaving the tremendous garrisons there impotent for anything but local action.

Air patrols near Celebes damaged a 2,00-ton freighter and sank a 200-ton schooner, it was announced, while fighters sweeping Ceram Island, south of Halmaheras, destroyed or damaged 20 small freighters, three coastal vessels and six barges.

Many Dozens Killed, Injured By Flying Bombs

London, Aug. 21—(CP)—Britons, counting dozens of dead and injured after sharp weekend flying bomb attacks, found cheer today in news that rocket guns were being used successfully against the robots.

British hope of relief from flying bombs was heightened by prospects that Allied advances in the western France soon might drive the Nazis from some of their launching sites.

Both British coastal and aerial observers reported the rocket guns launching platforms already had been forced to move farther northeast.

The rocket guns, such as defended London last night, were reported considerably successful in knocking them flying before short of their targets. But nevertheless, sporadic robot attacks took a toll of lives and property in London and southern counties yesterday and there seemed little let-up again today.

In one village 11 persons were killed and others hurt yesterday when a rocket landed among a row of service shelter. Another bomb hit a row of houses, killing six and injuring several. Still another killed three civilians and two Canadian soldiers.

A fourth robot killed five children and flattened many nearby homes. And a fifth struck at an apartment house, killing six and trapping injured on the upper floors.

Enemy No Longer Contesting Air Over Moluccas

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, Aug. 21—(AP)—Japan is withdrawing her planes from the Moluccas and ripping up the abandoned drome, leaving that island cluster south of the Philippines wide open for Allied invasion.

Largest island of the Moluccas group, also known as the spice islands, is Halmaheras, 200 miles west of New Guinea and only 300 south of Mindanao.

Announcing that "under constant punishment, the enemy is apparently withdrawing his air forces to bases further westward beyond our bomber range," an Allied communique said today:

"This will make possible an advance westward without the necessity of costly frontal assaults to clear the way.

Bases Neo-Operative.

"Our air force is continuing its pressure but is finding many enemy air bases non-operative and others stripped of planes.

N. B. Bush Fires Under Control

Fredericton, Aug. 21. (CP)—A long-awaited rain falling steadily early brought hope to hundreds of fire-fighters throughout New Brunswick that forest and bush fires which are raging and threatening scores of timberland and threatened the populated centres would be scotched shortly.

Improvement in the situation was reported from most points where the blazes have been the most devastating and threatening since early last week, after censorship permitted last night to disclose that two men were arraigned here Saturday on charges of arson.

The men, Harold Sullivan, a Fredericton taxi driver, and Gerald Gill of neighboring North Devon were remanded until Thursday.

They were arrested Friday and charged with setting fire in the countryside at Cody's Queen's Co., and Kierstead Mountain and Plumsweep, King's County, following outbreaks in those localities. Pleas at those points were put out before they had a chance to spread.

Censorship banned publication of the news on "security" grounds. It was learned here while investigation was going on to determine whether the accused had any accomplices.

21 ENEMY PLANES DOWNED

Rome, Aug. 21.—(CP)—Mediterranean Air Force planes shot down only 21 enemy planes in the week ending Saturday, despite the opening of full-scale invasion. The low score was blamed largely on bad marksmanship, but by the lack of German planes.

Two Years After Dieppe

Two years after the raid at Dieppe finds the United Nations with unrivalled power, striking the Hun back on every front, with the Russian offensive bearing upon the eastern side of Hitler's "fortress" and the Western Allies driving towards the outskirts of Paris, threatening with certainty German occupation of France which is crumbling.

The full import of the raid at Dieppe will of course not be known until after the war is over. Since Dieppe the United Nations have come into their full striking power which has made the two years since that memorable occasion a space that must forever remain in German memory for the growing supremacy of the Allies, the unprecedented development of the Allied air forces, the eclipse of the German effort by means of U-boats and the full strength of army manpower and of machine power of the nations arrayed against the Hitlerite and German military machine.

Since Dieppe there have been great events, beginning with the landing in Sicily, followed by the landings at Salerno and Anzio, the greatest of all invasions on the English invasion landings on the coast of Normandy and the latest landing also in gigantic strength on the Riviera coast of France, while there have been the great landings in the Pacific war theatre all marked by the fullest command of every form of effort.

The United Nations have developed the mightiest and most formidable force in all history with a complete co-ordination of every phase of attack. The German blitzkrieg cannot compare with this development.

That Dieppe served the Allied cause in a way which cannot be overestimated is the belief of every one.

Canadians can feel with great pride that this young nation was able to serve so well the Allied developments and completion of preparations for the most powerful offensive ever staged in all time against the most aggressive and tyrannical military regime, based on lust for power and loot. Germany sowed a tempest and blitzkrieg but is reaping a whirlwind of judgment at the hands of the United Nations who wield the sword of justice in the name of humanity, the worst reversion in the course of all history to the barbaric and savage state by a nation, which claimed to be civilised. Selfish aggrandizement has been Germany's aim but for the honor of the world there have been found enough nations to gird on the sword to bring the German tyranny to an end.

Dieppe had no small part to play in the planning for the grand victorious assault upon German banditry and criminality.

Paris

For some days France's capital has admittedly been "a front-line city." From June 6th., the D-Day which will go down in history, to the middle of August has been a comparatively short time, but in that period great events have come to pass. Allied Powers of the West have the Germans retreating everywhere in Western, Southern and Northern France before a form of warfare the Germans have never experienced. Their blitzkrieg was a fairly quiet affair as contrasted with the sweeping power of the co-ordinated land, sea and air forces which are clearing France, giving that nation the high place of helpmate in the redemption of her territory and capital and spreading the sense of impending defeat throughout the length and breadth of the shrinking territory over which Hitler claimed sway.

From the twilight of four years under German rule France has sprung full of life at the throat of the enemy and is backed by the greatest empire for the destruction of German armies the Allies of France have been able to develop. The expansion of the beachhead in Normandy has been phenomenon even to those who knew the power of the Allies in the west has shown steadily increasing strength, the full extent of which is yet to be hurled at the Hun.

On the Russian front the Russians have been carrying on a swift offensive and have been developing a new assault against the eastern defences of the Reich.

The brilliant daring of the armies in the west and south in Italy is something that the enemy could never have expected. And enough of this has been shown to convince the enemy that he faces defeat. Swift beyond anything the Germans were able to perform have been the operations in wresting parts of France from the Hun. Germany is steadily being beaten back and the enemy has been left but one hope, trust in some form of miracle as in the roboomb for instance in possibly providing a loophole for the Huns. But their brutalising by the indiscriminate bombing by flying bombs has strengthened the Allied resolve to place their banners on the citadel of Hitler's tyranny in Berlin. Nothing can save Berlin, the capital of the German nation. That has been made clear.

With the swift developments in France the world has been electrified, the enemy stunned and France given the great opportunity to prove that her spirit lives and that her city, Paris, will shortly be free. The coming of that day will be freighted with great import for the world.

Saves Mistress

(London Evening News)

Paddy is a brown and white fox terrier and a hero.

He and his mistress, Miss Day, were sleeping in a semi-basement when he heard the engine of a flying bomb. He jumped on to the bed and licked his mistress' face to wake her.

She managed to slip under the bed. Paddy followed her. The bomb exploded. Glass crashed in.

"The bed was covered with broken glass," said Miss Day, whose forehead was bandaged. "If Paddy had not awakened me I would have been seriously injured."

Lest We Forget Again

(New York Times)

As the war begins to go better and better for our side, thousands of Americans are disposed to quit their war jobs and hurry to peacetime jobs, eager to get in early on the prosperity that, they believe, awaits them just round the corner. Anxious voices warn us that to let down now in war production may cost us the victory that seems so near. We can drift away from the war factories goes on.

Other mentors of the time point out another danger. Are we sure, they ask, that once having won the hoped-for victory, we shall not forget why we fought and toiled to win it? In 1919 we of America, along with our allies of the First World War, found it convenient to forget why we had won the victory of that time. Are we to repeat the mistake this time?

War On Wasps

(London Times)

Wasps are anything but scarce this year. Farmers, while haymaking, have been plagued with their buzzing from the nests disturbed, and for their own protection have had to resort to the old-fashioned "remedy" for wasps' nests of burning cyanide of potassium. It is difficult to catch by and creosote an indifferent substitute for tar.

Waste oil is better than tar, and should be administered carefully. Instead of night, instead in the hole, which is then plugged up, or earth heaped over it, and left for several days.

In this connection it is understood that if one is on a tractor one can do what he likes with wasps' nest, break it up and plow it in, for the fumes of tractor-oil are obnoxious to wasps and a sure defence from stings.

JUST FOLKS

PLATFORM

All parties in rounded phrase
Their platforms for the coming days.
Their aims, their hopes, their plans, they state,
What strength they have to cope with fate;
What they believe in; what pursue,
And what they've planned for your career;
What you proposed to do with time;
How high you'd set yourself to climb,
Could you a program fair advance
Or answer: "All I leave to chance"?

Parties must tell that all may know
Towards what goals they wish to go.
But man, at life's adventurous start,
Must write his platform on his heart;
Must tell himself in silent hours
To what he'll dedicate his powers;
To what high aims his strength he gives
And for what purposes he lives.

At an emergency meeting of Eureka Lodge, No. 283 A.F. and A.M., Bro. Wor. Bro. Col. S. S. Lazier explained that the object of the meeting was to recognize in some tangible manner Bro. E. D. O'Flynn, who had volunteered to go to the front in command of the 15th. Regiment volunteers and he called upon Bro. W. J. Diamond who presented Bro. O'Flynn with a Masonic ring and an automatic revolver.

Thirty-three members of the 34th. battery of this city left this morning for Kingston where they will be attached to the 9th. Brigade staff. The party was in charge of Sergeant-Major R. M. Best.

Mr. Fred Lingham is now in London, England, enroute to his home here.

Mr. Charles Nunn has returned to the city from Colborne.

Mr. A. E. Large left today for Sudbury where he will spend some time.

Going down to the band concert last evening at the city gates could not help being impressed with the great number of sailing and steam craft anchored in the harbor. They were thicker than the frogs on the park and that is saying a good deal. No wonder some of our up-to-date young men want a yacht club here. It would surely be the correct thing.

U.S. Colonel's Philosophy of War Is Expressed in Simple Formula

(By ERNIE PYLE)

On the Western Front (by wireless) — The commander of the particular regiment in the First Infantry Division that we have been with is one of my favorites.

That's partly because he flatters me by calling me "General", partly because just looking at him makes me chuckle to myself, and partly because I think he's a very fine soldier.

Security forbids my giving his name. He is a Regular Army colonel and he was overseas in the last war. His division commander says the only trouble with him is that he's too bold, and if he isn't careful he's liable to get clipped one of these days.

He is rather unusual looking. There is something almost Mongolian about his face. When excited up he could be a Cossack. When tired and dirty he could be a movie gangster. But either way, his eyes always twinkle.

He has a facility for direct statement that is unusual. He is impatient of thinking that gets off onto byways.

He has a little habit of good-natured, disarming people by cocking his head over to one side, getting his face below yours and then delivering sharp and low looking up at you with a quizzical look and a half-laughing air.

One day I heard him ask a battalion commander what his position was. The battalion commander started going into details of where his troops were, but got as far as he had hoped. The colonel looked at him over, squinted up at the battalion commander, and said:

"I didn't ask you that. I asked you where you were."

The colonel goes constantly from one battalion to another during battle, from early light till darkness. He wears a new-type field jacket that fits him like a glove, and he carries a long stick that Teddy Roosevelt gave him, perhaps constantly prodding his commanders to push ahead, not to let up, to keep driving and driving.

He is impatient with commanders who have the situation well in hand by getting involved in details —the main point, of course, is to kill Germans. His philosophy of war is expressed in the simple formula of shoot the ——.

Once I was at a battalion command post when we got word that 60 Germans were coming down the road in a counter attack. Everybody got excited. They called the colonel on a field phone and told him the details. He asked him what to do. He had the solution in a nutshell.

He just said, "Shoot the ——," hung up.

Another of my favorites is a sergeant who runs the colonel's regimental mess. He cooks some himself, but mostly supervises the cooking.

His name is Charles J. Murphy and his home is at (225 East State St.) Trenton, N.J. Murphy is pink-cheeked, had his head nearly shaved like practically all the Western troops, and looks about 16 as well as men. Murphy is funny, but he's serious, too.

When I asked him what he did in civilian life, he thought a minute and then answered, "Well, I was a shyster. Guess you'd call me a kind of lawyer. I haven't had the kind of job where you made $50 a week salary and kicked for more."

Here's that on an honest man? Murph and I got to talking about newspapermen one day. Murph said his brother-in-law was a newspaperman. He retired in old age and lived in Florida.

"My grandfather went nuts reading newspapers," Murphy said. "He'd get a paper every day. Every day he'd buy $1.50 worth of 2-cent newspapers and read 'em from cover to cover.

"He wouldn't read the ads. He would just read the stories, looking for something to criticize. He'd get mad at 'em.

"Lots of times when I was a kid he'd get so mad at what he'd read in the morning and point to some story in the paper and tell me what reporters who didn't have sense enough to put a period at the end of a sentence.

Murph and I agreed that it was ridiculous for a newspaper to exist before he got to reading my stuff, or he would doubtless have run out.

Murph never smoked cigarettes until he landed in France on D-Day, but now he smokes one after another. He's a big, strong, husky soldier who has told me the same thing. A guy in war has to have some kind of nerves, and I guess smoking is as good as anything.

All kinds of incongruous things happen during a battle. For instance, during one hill I was in particularly, there was color. The artist sat crosslegged on the grass and painted the scene.

The painter was Pfc. Leon Wall, from Chicago. He is a member of the National Academy of Design in New York for six years, did research in the Chicago Art Institute and lectured on art at the New York World's Fair.

Artist Wall is now, of all things, a cook and KP in a battalion kitchen. He hasn't done any war paintings at all since the invasion. I asked him why, and he said:

"Well, at first I was too scared, and since then I've been too busy."

A FAIR DEAL WANTED FOR CANADIAN UNIONS

(Northern Miner)

Judging from the action in taking over control of Montreal Tramways, the Government of the Province of Quebec is not going to be outdone by the Government of Canada, has become fed up with the C.I.O. and its associates and determined to protect labor in the province without regard to national interest.

The time has arrived for a full stock of where labor legislation is actually at.

When it became essential that Canadian industry operate in full swing with a minimum of interruption, demands of organized labor for legislation to protect the rights of organizing activities were met almost overnight by U.S. inspired provincial governments competed in new labor legislation supposedly for the purpose of protecting the working people from their employers. The Government which, while ostensibly, employee relationships we ever had in this country. Wages increased, had brought workers high wages, excellent working conditions and an opportunity to enjoy life to the full. This was particularly true in the mining industry which, over a period of years, developed into the best industry for labor in the Dominion.

Everywhere the demands of the union propagandist was for legislation that would make set-up conditions for the so-called Communists. And they got the legislation. They got laws that brought a succession of useless, costly strikes and general unsettlement among working people.

Freedom to choose their collective bargaining agency was the cry of the Internationals, and they immediately set up a reign of terror with that objective to set themselves up in the operation up to date field on a perpetuating non-com-

NURSES NOT WANTED

I am eighteen years old, have had two years of high school, and believe I can meet the physical requirements for admission to nurse training school. I have been writing for two years since I left school, but never with satisfaction, as I want to become a nurse.

I have checked with numerous hospitals recognized by the State, and find that in their eyes I am practically illiterate, since I am not a graduate of college or at least of high school.

My parents will consent to my going to another State and I can get a reasonable tuition fee if necessary. Can you tell me of any hospital nurse training course I can take in the circumstances?

(Miss M. V.)

Something about this young woman's letter reminds me of many letters I have received from young women who are now pupils in a recognized nurse training school or have completed such training and are now graduate nurses. In some instances, registered nurses — authorized to use the letters R.N. after their name. It is not a point of similarity in the letters, however, but something within the writer without a fault in form, punctuation, spelling. A good many of the letters I receive from young women are studying nursing and from graduate nurses registered nurses are not.

I mention this because, after all, graduation from high school or graduation from college does not necessarily imply a higher degree of intelligence than the individual who has had only a year or two of high school may have.

I am sorry to say I don't know of any recognized nurse training courses which are open to young women who have not graduated from highschool.

What this country sorely needs right now is a supply of good two-year nurses. The present system of getting a supply of two-year (that is, trained in a two-years course) nurses who have been robbed of a year's service by the hospital where they receive their training because they are allowed to begin their careers. That, children, is the main reason for the three-years course. It is pretty soft for the hospitals that have adopted it. Every one of the nurses produced by the present system at work. I'll say that it is a good patient trade. A flock of 'em for one two-year nurse who probably had no more than a year of highschool, if that—but she knew how to take care of her patients.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Thumb Sucking

Our daughter is 3 years old and still sucks her thumb in spite of every effort we can make to break her of the habit.

(D. A.)

Answer—Send stamped envelope bearing your address, or pamphlet will be mailed you. Thumb sucking, which deals with the psychology of the problem, is treated in pamphlet No. 2.

I am 14 years old, will be 15 in November. I am 63 1/2 inches tall and weigh 102 pounds. I am very healthy. Several of the boys at school have started to smoke cigarettes about a pack a day. My mother is much disturbed about it. Will it stunt my growth?

(C. R.)

Answer—Smoking may have no permanent effect on growth. But still, it may not stunt growth in stature, but it will probably stunt growth in efficiency in every respect. Boy aged 14 years 8 months should gain 4 inch in height and 4 pounds in weight by time he reaches age of 15 years 8 months. Any boy who persisted you to begin smoking don't chime when it comes to health especially, should lose all ability either. They're just misguided prematurely old men. They are in training for a 4-F rating. Your height and weight are fine, son. Keep them that way and now try cultivating the easy habits of the smartalecks.

Tooth Powder Pearlites

Some time ago you had an article about tooth powder. Will you kindly send me a copy of this.

(F.J.J.)

Answer—I have no copy. Rush writing (without the slightest trouble) after a bath is due to excessive dryness of the skin. Apply oil of natural skin oil by soap and hot water. Dont soak or scrub, just shower. Use water cooler than the shower the better. Send stamped envelope bearing your address, for pamphlet "Itching".

Fashion Flashes

THERE'S WEALTH at the blouse counter these days—a wealth of color, design and trimming. Nice for suit wear is a black and pink striped taffeta blouse finished at neck and wrists with self ruffles.

THERE ARE MANY OCCASIONS when a silk suit is right. A grand afternoon-into-evening suit is of navy blue bengaline, the jacket fastened with buttons of brilliants, the neck and V-line outlined with dotted Swiss and lace ruffles. Cuffs are ruffle trimmed too.

SMARTLY YOUNG is a 22-inch coat of leopard made very full in back, with tuxedo collar and turned back cuffs. Nice for wear over woolen frocks, or with separate skirts and blouses.

A GOOD WAY to accustom women to the new "more hat" look is to prepare cards for selling the new hat sizes, ranging from medium to large. This has been done with a beautiful black felt, wide brimmed, low-wide crown hat, also swathed with tulle dotted with giant sequins.

LIKELY TO SUCCEED on the campus is a three-quarter length double-breasted coat of long wearing tweed in deep currant red lined with soft, warm, white lambskin.

RETURN TO TOWN of the evening coat is noted. Slim knee-length, draped formal models will appear in many showings. Light blue diagonal woolen is used for such a wrap. It is lined in black satin, is collarless and has yoke and shoulder trimming of black jet plume-like motifs.

Velvet Time

By ALICE E ALDEN

VELVET is the beautiful and effective advance guard of winter fashions, but the velvet frocks we have seen are so soft, so light, that women will hardly wait for autumn to get started wearing them. Jumper in the New York manner is this dress!

enchanting and young dinner dress of very soft bright blue velvet with soft yoke and frill and simply voluminous sleeves of soft white marquisette. Here, certainly, is something different in the jumper dress!

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 21 —(AP)— He wasn't given much of a chance when the tournament opened, in fact was dismissed with the classification of a "comer," but Bob Hamilton earned the title of 1944 Professional Golfers Association championship today.

The 32-year-old "Darkhorse" from Evansville, Ind., playing in this tournament for the first time, defeated Byron Nelson, Toledo, O., 1 up over 36 holes yesterday, to win the biggest money golf championships. Only the victory of Tom Creavy over Sammy Byrd in 1931 approached Hamilton's achievement.

And in defeat, Nelson was still the best golfer of the field, when considered on a medal play basis. The man from Ohio played 136 holes in 36 shots under par. Only on the final day, when it counted two 70 rounds did he fail 3o complete 18 holes in the 60s.

Yet he won only second money of $1,500. Hamilton, who played 203 holes during the two days in 13 under par figures, had it over his rival on the last day. He posted a 70, then a 69 and his one-hole margin for the terse match play battle paid off richly, $3,500 style.

Incidentally, Hamilton defeated the two outstanding golfers of the United States. He beat Harold McSpaden, Philadelphia, in the money winner of the year, 2 and 1 in the quarter finals.

Sizing up every shot so deliberately that at times Nelson appeared on the verge of falling asleep, Hamilton outstarred Nelson in the pinches. He had what it takes in the pinch and that came in the 36th green after Nelson had dropped a 12-footer for a birdie three. Hamilton had chipped up to less than two feet past the cup.

After he sank it for a half which gave him the title he confided he had prayed that one so difficult as possible because the more he looked at it the longer he seemed to get.

Proceeds of the P. G. A. tournament were given to Spokanes' two army hospitals and they divided up close to $22,000.

Never one to dodge an issue, especially if it's in the wrestling ring, "Big Earl" McCready, perhaps the most popular Canadian wrestler in the business, readily agreed to meet John Katan, the Palermo Panther, again when he was approached regarding a rematch by Pronzo Tommy. How about setstendling the time limit for this bout to an hour and a half?" asked Tunney cautiously. "Make any time limit you wish but I can beat that man or anybody else in much short time than that," assured McCready, who always has an accommodating air, so McCready and Katan will meet another stretch as headliners at the Hume Arena Wednesday night.

For good measure Maestro Tunney signed Dr. Len Hall, the Hollywood villain, to meet the little "Irish Tom" Collins of Buffalo, while Nanjo Singh, the popular Hindu, will oppose Joe Maich, another popular Canadian wrestler.

School-teacher Arne Anderson took the measure of Gerald Hegna in winning the 1,500-metre final at the Swedish track and field championships in the Stockholm stadium yesterday. Anderson's time was 3.45.1, a slow time of 3:49.6. Hagg won the 5,000-metre title in 14.32.2 on Saturday, this performance also being far off the record.

Some 600 golfers, including professionals, amateur champions and amateurs, are expected to swing clubs in the Tam O'Shanter tournament which gets under way at Chicago today with $25,500 in prize awards. Upwards of 200 are to make a bid for the $13,462 in war bonds which is the record first-place purse in that division.

Paperboy, owned by W. "Sonny" Hanch, ran off with the Saratoga Handicap at Saratoga on Saturday to take down $35,850 and pay his backers $36.80. The 3-year-old beat Devil Diver, and First Fiddle, fought it out for last place, many lengths behind.

The office of Defence Transportation at Washington has issued a request to major league baseball officials to see that the world series ticket is to person living in or near cities where the baseball games are to be played. No special trains are likely to be provided for teams or fans.

A 17-year-old apprentice jockey, Eddie Yeoman of Indianapolis, rode six winners in the eight-horse card Saturday to establish a record for Beulah Park, Columbus, O. Five winners has been ridden by one jockey in 1935 and again in 1943.

MONTREAL JUNIORS WIN

Montreal, Aug. 21 (CP)—Montreal Seven-Ups advanced another step in search of Eastern Canada junior baseball honors yesterday when they eliminated Ottawa Brfaves by taking the third game of a best-of-three series which started in Ottawa Saturday.

The Montreal club captured the deciding game here by a 16-15 score after the Braves had tied the series by winning 11-2 earlier in the day. Montreal had taken the series opener in Ottawa Saturday by a count of 9-2.

BELLEVILLE JRS. DEFEAT ALEMITES IN SMART GAME

Alemite Field at Pine Street Now in Excellent Playing Condition

SCORE IS 11-8

Belleville's junior ballsters showed the way home to the Alemite nine winning 11 to 8 in one of those interestingly-pointed baseball battles at noon baseball games at the new Alemite Field yesterday. The new Alemite Field has been further conditioned by the SWACO sports committee and is in excellent playing condition.

Trailing in the early stages the local "juniors" rallied to score six runs in the seventh frame and then held the older opponents at bay. Ernie Summer's Alemites took a commanding lead of three runs in the initial frame on hits by Booth, Dafoe and Sparling. Three hits by Hammett and Spafford gave Belleville another in their half of the inning. In the meantime the Junior kids were kept off the score sheet by Irving Sharpe's fine mound duel the fifth when Skipper Fitzpatrick's timely triple helped the Juniors add a scored two. Hammett walked and Blaine Bush banged out a double to score the former, Bush scoring the only two Juniors score after the clout. The kids added three more runs in the sixth on hits by Fitzpatrick with a triple with Bush and Hewson singling and R. Bush scoring on a fielder's choice. Dafoe saw the batter out trying to stretch the clout. Sparling helped the Juniors score one in the seventh as only Fitzpatrick singled and Strachan doubled for the only two hits garnered off Smith in this frame.

Alemites Rally

The Alemites rallied in their half of the inning to score four runs and leave the tying runs aboard. In the first frame, Booth, Louis, Hammett and Spafford singled while "Zeke" Philip hit a home run with one aboard. However, Al Kelleher struck out the final batter with the tying runs on bases. Kelleher repeated out 13 while pitching for the Juniors while Ernie Smith blew by his rival and all 12 strike outs. The Juniors out hit the Alemites 12 to 11. Bush made the game's most sensational running catch in left field.

The line-ups:

Belleville Juniors — E. Bush, C. Doyle, Hewson, R. Bush, Dell, Thompson, Strachan., Fitzpatrick and Kelleher.

Alemites — Hammett, Spafford, Booth, Louis, E. Smith, Dickey, Philip, Mullin, Martin, Keller, Tebworth and Young.

SWACO LASSIES ADVANCE INTO SEMI-FINALS

Down Bell Sargents 6-3 to Win Series in Two Straight

CALCUTT ON MOUND

Playing consistent ball throughout, Courtney Calcutt's SWACO lassies advanced to the semi-final series in the Belleville Ladies' softball League by downing the Bell Sargents' gals 6 to 3 in the second game Saturday evening. The loss for the Sargents eliminates them, the SWACO lads taking the series in two straight games.

Meeting with the Soldier's choice the winners one in the initial frame, but Jack Symons' Sargents came back with two in the bottom half of the stanza as Marinoff walked, went to second on a fielder's choice, to score on Twila Langman's double, the latter scoring on Clarke's single. Hits by Levere and Rene Golden gave SWACOS another in the count in the third and they scored two in the fifth as the result of two errors followed by pete Haslip's single to centre. Hits from the bats of Langman and Dot Rowbotham gave the winners two more in the top half of the last inning and cinched the game. The Sargents rallied in the final inning to score one after Clarke hit and scored on Marinoff's single, Calcutt's fielder's choice and Bessie Doolittle stranded on the runways to get the last two batters out.

This evening Reliance and the Combines commence their part of the league playdowns in a best-in-three series at the Armouries with Courtney Calcutt hurling for the SWACOS striking out four and walking five, while Bessie Doolittle pitched for the vanquished Sargents, striking out six and walking the same number. The umpires were H. Bawden and W. Kiser.

London Team Unable To Go To Witchita, Kan.

Toronto, Aug. 21—(CP)— Canadian Commissioner Lloyd Douglas of the National Baseball Congress announced yesterday that London, winners of the Canadian Softball championship, will not go to Witchita, Kan., for the World's championship tournament.

The Londoners would be unable to take time off from business and Commissioner Douglas is loathe to send a weakened entry.

Mr. Douglas, however, is trying to make arrangements for an extra "World American" series. He proposes bringing the American Softball winners to London for a seven game series, and negotiations are now under way.

Sports Roundup

Associated Press Sport Writer
New York, Aug. 21 —(AP)— Looks as if the United States Tennis championships at Forest Hills Labor Day week-end will be entirely a feminine show . . . Of the entries received so far Lieut. Don Budge should't have any competition for the men's title if he's in condition but the gals can only will have all the top-flight stars on hand but so far this season they haven't paid the slightest attention to form (that is, playing tennis) . . . Any one of a half-dozen girls might win.

Suggestion Noted

Arguing that baseball "hasn't changed since Doubting Thomas started as strikes," Dr. Clarence Rungee of New Haven, Conn., proposes striking a man with four outs in each inning . . . His idea is that players would "sprint" all the way, just as runners have stepped up the pace for the mile instead of coasting through three quarters and then cutting loose . . . Also "there would be three less times for the pitchers to warm up between innings" Rungee adds . . . That's our idea of a real improvement.

They had been having one or their frequent squabbles and he was getting the worst of it.

"I wish," he said in exasperation, "that some brainless idiot had proposed to you before we were married."

"He did, darling," replied his wife, calmly.

This rather took the wind from his sails.

"Well, then," he exclaimed, "I wish he had married you."

"Yes, darling," she replied, still unperturbed, "he did."

The Bata "Bombers," last year's Intermediate "O" finalists in the O.A.S.A.A. are back mixing their suits as a provincial baseball title this year. In their first playdown game this year the "Bombers" beat Napanee 20 to 2 on Saturday. They return to Napanee for the second game tonight. Incidentally Jim Stacey and Gordon Cuff shared the Bata hurling chores, the latter apparently having pitched softball for Toronto. The Bata "Bombers" went out and garnered in as many runs in the early stages that the league was never in doubt. After Stacey had handcuffed the Napanee boys for six frames, Cuff took over the batsmen' pitching chore.

The winner of this series meets Charlie Dion's Tweed team in the Eastern Ontario Intermediate "O" semi-finals. The Tweed nine gained considerable experience this year throughout the current season in the local softball league.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 680

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

When partner takes a chance and puts us in the soup, we'd like to kick his pants and stick him in the coop. But when his gamble wins, no matter why or how, we crowd his shi and claim him as a wow.

Go at this pair of partnership hands:

♠A 10
♥A Q
♦A K Q 6 2
♣K Q 7 4
NORTH
♠A 4
♥K 10
♦7 5 4 3
♣8 3 2
WEST	EAST
♠K Q 8 7 6 5 3	♠J 9
♥7 6 5 4 3	♥J 9 8 2
♦10	♦J 9 8
♣J 10 9	♣A K 6 5
SOUTH
♠4 2
♥Q
♦A K Q 6 2
♣Q 7 4 3

The bidding went like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 D	3 D
4 NT	5 D
7 D	Pass

South counts ten tricks in his hand. They are enough to expect a game. And when you show such a hand is by an opening bid of two-in a suit.

Four no-trump is the signal for asking partner how many aces and kings he had. Five diamonds is the signal for showing the two aces and no kings.

Two tricks may be lost to the missing kings. So, if south had passed the five diamond bid, it would have been with good reason. After all, a five game is better than a dead one.

But this declarer hoped he could save a trick with a ruff on clubs or a heart finesse. Or with some clever play, perhaps. Anyway, he decided to take a chance at a small slam in diamonds.

Does it pay to gamble for a slam when it looks as if it is dependent on a finesse? A finesse is a 50-50 chance. So, it would seem to be an even bet.

However, a Horse Sense bidder has an edge in deciding. If he has discovered 13 tricks in the pair's chances are favorable. But if he has seen only 11 or less, chances are against it.

If expert, a player has an additional factor. He may be able to substitute a strip-and-endplay, a squeeze, or some other coup. Or get indignant if you object.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Charlie Chan In The Secret Service"

(First Belleville Showing)

An old friend returned to the screen at the Capitol Theatre Monday midnight, with the opening performance of "Charlie Chan In The Secret Service," starring Sidney Toler in his familiar characterization of the famous Chinese sleuth. The film is a worthy successor to those which have gone before, and will be greeted with pleasure by a large proportion of theatregoers.

In the present story, the inventor of a secret weapon for the government is murdered in his own home, and the plans stolen from his pocket, even while a cocktail party is in progress. Chan is called in to solve the mystery, and becomes the centre of an exciting series of events. How the Oriental detective unravels many diverse clues and eliminates various suspects among the guests, makes an interesting study in scientific deduction.

Benson Fung is Chan's "Number one son and Mariana Quon is his daughter while Lee American. Cast includes Cwen Kenyon Mantan Moreland, Arthur Loft, Leiah Tyler, Frank Oliver, Eddie Chandler, George Lewis Muni Seroff and George Lessey. These constitute a thoroughly capable group of players.

The added hilarious comedy hit "He Stayed for Breakfast" stars Loretta Young and Melvyn Douglas with Alan Marshal, Eugene Pallette and Una O'Connor.

The new Canada Carries On featurette "Wounded In Action" completes the bill.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Ghost Catchers"

Lon Chaney thinks that playing a role in a ghost comedy-mystery picture is a dangerous thing for a "horror" man to do.

"I had more fun than I've had in any picture I've ever worked in," Chaney declared when he finished his role in Universal's "Ghost Catchers," which stars Olsen and Johnson, and now playing at the McCarthy Theatre. He added, "what it's going to do to my career is something else."

Chaney thinks that a horror actor such as Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, or himself, should remain in character in every screen appearance.

"We monsters should get together and form a union," he said. "The public comes to see us in a fantastic ghost, or mummy, or zombie, or Frankenstein, or Wolf Man picture, and we expect the audience to take us seriously. Thus far, they have. But now what can we compare when we let them be cast in roles where the horror scenes are spoofed?"

And that's exactly what takes place in the film, Edward Johnson, picture Director Edward F. Cline predicts that "Ghost Catchers" is the horror picture to end all horror pictures."

Romantic attraction "Lumberjack," featuring William Boyd, is a real fist swinging, gun blazing yarn. Universal News completes the program.

AT THE BELLE

"Up In Arms", in Color.

Bubbling with some of the gayest nonsense ever put on the screen, Samuel Goldwyn's technicolor production of "Up in Arms" is now on the Belle Theatre screen. It is a new high in clever tunefilm entertainment, with Danny Kaye, the Broadway favorite, Danny Kaye, as the comedy "find" of the year.

Kaye is featured by the RKO Radio release, with Dinah Shore, Dana Andrews, Constance Dowling and another brilliant newcomer; and among the Goldwyn honors are a few laughter-laden fares plot rolling at a merry pace.

The picture, adorned with catchy new song numbers, deals with the induction of a hypochondriac Kaye, with his pal, is drafted into uniform and sent to the front. Both, along with the pair's nurse girl friends, Dinah Shore and Constance Dowling, get into a big mix up by his colonel's comment that Danny is the nearest thing to a man since Benedict Arnold.

A spectacular dream sequence in the Land of Nod, "Home Girls, Danny's sub-splitting experiences as a "parachute tester," and his heroic capture of a whole platoon of Nip soldiers with his bare hands are highlights which maintain the sparkling amusement values of the picking.

Kaye himself turns in a remarkable performance in a role that reveals his versatility to the full, and Miss Shore's portrayal is delightful. Andrews and Miss Dowling as the other comple furnish perfect cooperation. Direct Wood's smooth direction and the two sets of songs by Sammy Cahn and Ted Koehler and by Sylvia Fine and Max Liebman help to make "Up In Arms" a delightful entertainment for every picturegoer.

Browns Lose Two, Boston Red Sox Win Pair and American League Race Much Tighter

Detroit Tigers Join the Dog Fight by Taking Two From Yankees

TROUT WINS 20th GAME

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Visions of an all-St. Louis World's Series for the first time in major league history may be just that—visions.

The pennant-hungry Browns of St. Louis watched their first place lead dwindle to a mere 3 1-2 games over Boston Red Sox as they bowed twice yesterday to the cellar-dwelling Washington Senators, 4-3 and 12-1 to suffer their fourth straight defeat, their longest losing streak of the year.

The Red Sox became a pennant threat by vanquishing Cleveland Indians twice 8-6 and 11-4. They rounded out 20 games behind the 16 of them in the nightcap.

Detroit Tigers joined the dog-fight for the flag by sweeping a pair from New York Yankees 4-3 and 8-3, taking over 2nd place from the Yankees, only five games away from the leaders.

Dizzy Trout gained his 20th triumph in the nightcap as he belted his own cause with a two-run homer, his fourth of the season. Trout limited the Senators to the only 20-game winners in the circuit this year. Newhouser as the only 20-game winners in the circuit this year. Finales Increase Lead.

Pittsburgh Pirates increased their second-place lead over Cincinnati Reds to two games by consistent pitching and hitting to win 7-4 and 7-1. Jim Russell hit a pinch-hit homer with the bases full in the seventh inning of the opener. Four Chicago Cubs pitchers, Hank Otmo, Whitlow Wyatt and Acting-Manager Charlie Grimm, were banished from the games for arguing. They joined Manager Leo Durocher, suspended Saturday for the same.

After losing the opener 7-4 to Chicago Cubs, Brooklyn Dodgers struck defeat, New York Giants, behind Bill Voiselle's five-hit pitching, to end their slump, winning 3-1. Joe Medwick had a field day with seven hits in eight at bats, driving in Cards Drab Braves.

Rookie Woody Smith pitched Boston Braves to a 3-3 victory over St. Louis Cardinals for his first National League victory, after the Cards had drubbed the Braves 15-3 in the opener.

Philadelphia Athletics and Chicago White Sox split a twin bill, the Sox winning the opener 2-1 and the A's the afterpiece 5-4.

Bucky Walters pitched and batted his way to his 16th victory of the season as Cincinnati Reds defeated Philadelphia Phillies 2-0 in a 13-inning opener of a twin bill. The Phils won the second game, and drove in the winning run in the 12th with a single.

TORONTO LEAFS ARE SIZZLING IN INT. LEAGUE

Take Double Bill From Royals to Drive Within 3½ Games of First Place

NEWARK FIRST

(By The Associated Press.)

What makes the Newark Bears click?

That's what the seven other clubs of the International League are wondering today, for the Bears are on top of the Baltimore Orioles, previous tenants of the league lead.

The Bears' rise from the cellar, where they finished 1943 in first place is a tale of steady pitching, clutch hitting and a bit of luck.

Yesterday they swept a twin bill from Jersey City 6-5 and 6-1.

But if the Bears are hot, Toronto Maple Leafs are sizzling. The Leafs won both ends of a twin bill as they took two from Montreal, 8-3 and 6-2, and have won 11 of 12 games of third place. Harry Jordan won the first game, although he needed help from Earl Cook and tall Alex Mustafa. Woody Crowson went the route in the nightcap, his shutout was spoiled only when Red Durrett homered in the seventh.

By splitting with Baltimore 2-11 and 9-1, the Red Wings remained in third position from first place. The opener, in which nine pitchers were used, saw Sakas was the winner, Red Embree taking the loss. The second game was under Sam Lowry's control at the way.

Buffalo took two from Syracuse, 5-4 and 7-5. Andy Seminick, Hank Oana, each with one, and Otto Denning with two, were the hitting stars. Joe Orrell to the decision in the opener, while Robert Kohorst came back in the finals to pole home runs number 22 and 23 to retain his league lead in that department.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were having a little steak under a lot of onion for supper, with spinnitch and garnished on the side for green vegetables, and as said, Benny, you know the rule.

Meaning I was starting to eat my meat before my vegetables instead of just the opposite, and I said, no G, ma.

AW G is the wrong attitude, pop said. It should be O aw, the very contrary. In other words, you're growing taller and gaining in weight and becoming reasonably good looking under the alatern of approaching your meat by way of your vegetables instead of the other way round, and it's bad policy to change a winning game, as anysportsman will tell you, he said, and I said, But gosh, pop, I mean Jimminy, suppose I keep on eating that and would it get to be such a habit I cant change it?

Under the experiments will be a glowing success, pop said, and I said, No sir, pop, because I mean suppose I get stuck on a desert island where there's lots of wild fruit and nut no vegetables, or suppose all the farmers are in the army and you can even buy one vegetable, O wimickers I'll be so used to eating vegetables first I'm libel to starve to death with meat all around. Because I wont know how to begin.

That's serious, I never considered that side, pop said.

Making me start to feel lucky, and pop said, But on the other hand there probably wont be any desert islands in the future because they'll all be turned into fortresses in the interior of world peace, and it will more than likely be the farmers who will all be in the army, leaving the civilian population with nothing but wholesome sea of vegetables, so perhaps you'd better carry on as before.

Meaning eat my vegetables first, which I did, and everything.

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 17

"But why connect her with the Nazis if that's who they are working for?" Max demanded. "It doesn't sound logical."

"I told you we were dealing with very clever people," the colonel replied. "Kay has gone connected her with what was part of the plan to discredit Norwood and the College. It would make quite a sensational story for the papers and Jean Hallard's stories that went on. "I spoke to him about it, not telling him what she had said, exactly, but suggested that she should be replaced.

"He promised that he would do something about it, but he never did. Probably forgot about it. Dr. Norwood is a very kind man, a very trusting one, and he would hesitate a long time before taking drastic action against anyone unless he was sure they had done wrong."

About Kay.

She told Levering what she knew of Kay's background at the school, and how she had acted to remain after her graduation and had been given the job of the president's secretary.

"You've been very helpful, Miss Marston," Levering said. "Something me this letter was the very thing I needed. Something to connect Clyde with all this. I had been waiting, looking for, an error like that."

"But he advised me to destroy the letter—to put it in the fire."

"Well, Miss Marston showed the letter all right," Max remarked.

"Yes but not to anyone he expected. He had no idea that she would bring the letter to me. For once, he was over-zealous. I imagine by now she has taken the letter from you on some pretext and destroyed it himself."

"Not that he knows that I have the letter — but he knows I advised that we are in Shelton, looking around. It's very likely to make a desperate effort to retrieve the letter, Miss Marston."

In Danger.

"Oh, dear! Do you mean I may be in danger?" the woman was plainly frightened.

"If I have stirred up the gemlike man correctly, I imagine that he wouldn't hesitate at violence if it were necessary. When you have swung to the other side the way he has, there is only one logical path to follow. You've got to go how whole-way.

"Clyde is like a lot of others, thinking of thought in the beginning he could play both ends against the middle. But it doesn't work that way. You start out sowing seeds of dissension and the first thing you know there is only one way left for you to go—with the Axis."

"I — I'll be afraid to go home tonight," Miss Marston said, fearfully.

"We'll provide you with a place to stay," Levering assured her. "We'll see that nothing happens to you."

"So you think Clyde is desperate enough to—"

"I certainly do. Desperate and dangerous."

"What do you expect him to do?" Jeanne asked.

"I haven't any idea," Levering answered. "If I did, I'd take definite steps to stop him. I feel that he is frightened and will do something else, make some move that will provide us with definite proof, not only of his own activities but of those associated with him.

"I feel that whatever he attempts will be done quickly."

"You've already mentioned that you think Miss Marston may be in danger," Max said. "How about Jeanne? Won't he try to shut her up if he feels that you may believe her story instead of his?"

"Yes, I believe both of them are in a rather perilous position."

"As best I can, although both of you — Miss Marston and Jeanne — may be able to help me materially in solving this thing and ending Dr. Clyde's sinister activities."

"How do you mean?" Jeanne asked.

"I wonder if both of you are game to follow through in case Clyde makes a move to involve either of you. It will be dangerous — you realize that. We'll protect you to the very best of our ability, but of course there may be a slip up.

"He is desperate and he is clever. It's a chance to perform a real service for your country. It will take real courage. How about it?"

"Speaking for myself, I'm ready and willing, Mr. Levering, to do whatever you suggest, Max." Isn't often a woman has a chance to be of such service in war time." The dean spoke quickly.

"Good for you, Miss Marston!" the F. B. I. man exclaimed. "How about you?" He turned to Jeanne.

"Well—"

"Wait a minute," Max interrupted. "There is something to say about this. She's the girl I love. I'm not going to put her in danger."

"Mr. Levering thinks I can help. I'm willing to do it. You know yourself you'd despise me the rest of my days if I showed cowardice. I know I'd despise myself."

"But women have no business running into danger," Max protested. "Suppose a man's job—"

"You heard Mr. Levering—Miss Marston needs my help. How would you feel if I hung on to your arm and begged you not to go to your room when you'll leaves for overseas! You'd hate me. Men have no monopoly on courage!"

"Okay, you win." Max agreed. "I'm proud of you, even if I do think you're needlessly exposing yourself to danger."

"That's fine, girls," Levering beamed.

"What do we do now?" Jeanne wanted to know. "I'd like to go home and change my clothes if it's permissible."

"Of course," Levering laughed. "You're not in custody."

The four of them walked across the campus to Miss Marston's home, and the dean and the two men sat in the living room while the girl went upstairs, got a quick bath and put on fresh clothes.

Telephone Ring.

She had scarcely returned downstairs when the telephone rang. Miss Marston answered it.

"It's for you, Jeanne," she said, handing over the instrument.

"Hello."

"This is Lucia Ward," came the voice over the phone. "I just heard you were home. Wouldn't you like to come over and spend the night with us at Ward Park."

"Just a minute," the girl said into the phone and cupped the mouthpiece with her hand as she turned to the other. "It's Lucia, and she wants me to spend the night over at her Aunt's," she told them. "What shall I tell her?"

"It's the break I've been expecting," Levering said.

Jeanne took her hand from the phone and said:

"I think that would be very nice, Lucia. Will you come for me, darling? I get a ride?"

"I'll come for you. I'm downtown now and will be in a few minutes. You needn't bother with evening things. Just get your toothbrushes. I'll be right over."

"She seems to be in a great hurry," Jeanne told the others as she hung up the phone. "She'll be here in a few minutes. Any instructions, Mr. Levering?"

"Just a little as you can, and try to learn all she knows," he said. "She may be just talking to find out what we're doing. On the other hand it may be very dangerous. Girls may have put her up to this."

Levering quickly dialed a number and spoke softly into the phone. When he finished, he turned to Jeanne.

"We'll follow you, and there'll be a man within call at the Ward's. But you still may be in danger and have to depend on your own courage and wit. You'd better take this."

Gives Her Revolver.

He handed her a small revolver with the request that she put it in her handbag.

"Know how to use it?"

"I used to be pretty good at target shooting," the girl answered.

Max, who had been looking pretty miserable, breathed a sigh of thankfulness.

"How about me, Mr. Levering?" Miss Marston wanted to know.

"It looks like you're in the clear, but I'll leave a man with the place," he answered. "Come on, Max let's get out of here before Lucia Ward arrives. Can we go out the back way, Miss Marston?"

She led Levering toward the rear of the house. Max embraced the girl quickly and kissed her.

"We'll be close by darling," he said. "Don't be afraid."

"I won't," she murmured. He hurried from the room, ater the others.

Running to the front window she peered through the drapes. Lucia's car was just drawing up to the curb. Jeanne turned and hurried upstairs. She might as well give Levering and Max plenty of time to get away and get a car if they were going to follow her. She'd delay as long as she could.

Jeanne looked at the gun in her room. It was fully loaded, and although small, seemed to her to be very deadly. She was quite sure it could use it if were necessary to use it. The F. B. I. doesn't play around with toys.

She had fired a pistol many times during her school days. She had been a member of a rifle team that won a state prize and she and several of the other girls had also practiced with small arms, too.

But that was different . Then there was nothing to shoot at but a target. Now she might have to shoot a man — or a woman. She shuddered as she put the weapon back in her purse.

She wondered if Clyde was at Ward Park. Whether he was the person who had sent Lucia for her. She felt quite capable of handling Lucia by herself, but if there was Clyde and perhaps others to contend with, she wasn't so certain. Levering had said, however, that Max and men would be close. And she knew Max would be, too.

Vaguely she heard the front door bell ringing. Lucia was getting impatient. She sat down on the steps and opened the door.

"Sorry," she said to Lucia. "I was changing my clothes. Have you been here long?"

"Just a moment or so," the girl replied. "Are you ready?"

"Yes. I'll just leave a note for Miss Marston to tell her where I've gone."

"That won't be necessary," Lucia said, quickly. "You can phone her from the house. She'll be home then."

Jeanne agreed that would be all right, and followed her from the house out to the car.

Nervous.

Lucia seemed nervous as they settled down in the car. Her hands moved quickly, and the car started with a jerk that made the tires squeal in protest. Jeanne had never seen her this way before. She was always so calm, so self - possessed. Even when she had started the argument with Max about the ring, Lucia had remained unruffled, although she were aloof from the ordinary affairs of life. Now here she was driving badly, her hands were trembling on the wheel. She might be frightened or she might be desperate—Jeanne didn't know. She felt the purse in her lap, and as they sped along too fast, she quietly opened it and slipped her hand inside so it was right by the gun. She resolved to give her a feeling of courage just to know the gun was there. Whether she would dare use it, she didn't know.

Lucia didn't say a word until they were clear of Shelton and outskirts, and then she bowled along the country road toward Ward Park. Jeanne had traveled it enough to recognize several landmarks.

"I didn't know whether you'd come with me or not," Lucia, finally said. "Not after how mean I treated you in Chicago. But I was sure you understood when — I couldn't involve myself, and it was sure you could take care of yourself. You're out of trouble you were in."

"Nice of you to have so much confidence in me," Jeanne commented, dryly.

Must Secure Permit To Go West To Work

In the event anyone contemplating assisting in the harvesting of the crops in Western Canada this fall a permit from the National Selective Service board must be obtained before proceeding to the prairie provinces. In every case the Department of Labor is co-operating with the Department of Agriculture in order that Canada's wealth in wheat and other grains will be conserved as usual.

Those who are now employed in industry should apply for a permit to proceed out west and help in the harvest, then upon securing their present employer being willing to spare the party for a month or so they already working on or owning farms in the east must possess a card signed by the owner or some responsible municipal official in order to insure against the depletion of manpower in essential work. Full details can be obtained at the local Selective Service office.

Hastings Junior Farmers Hog Feeding Project To Secure Production Costs

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has arranged with the Junior Farmers' Association to conduct projects to secure accurate data on the cost of producing hogs under farming conditions and to obtain information regarding rations used.

The project is open to members of the Junior Farmers' Associations. The regulations governing the project require that not less than three and not more than five Junior Farmers in any one county may take part. The Department has reserved the right to limit the project to the first 150 suitable Junior Farmers whose names are submitted.

The project is supervised by a committee of two officers of the county Junior Farmers' Association and the Agric. Representative.

Each member taking part is required to feed a litter of not less than eight pigs from weaning to marketing and to maintain records of amounts, kind and cost of feed. The feeding period will be divided into two stages: weaning, from weaning to 10 or 60 pounds; growing stage, from 60 to 150 lbs. or 160 lbs., and finishing stage, from 140 and 150 lbs. to market weight.

Those taking part in the project will provide equal lots of their own choosing during each stage. They will also be required to weigh the pigs at the commencement of each stage and at the time of marketing and to keep accurate records of feed consumed during each stage.

To calculate the value of feed consumed during each period and during the entire feeding period will be based on the actual price being asked at the time by feed dealers in the district. Dairy products used in feeding will be valued at: skim milk 20 cents per cwt., whey, 15 cents per cwt.

The project is not a contest basis, on the lowest feed cost records, or the speed in which the finished hogs are marketed, but will be used to determine the actual costs of producing hogs under average farm conditions.

To assist with the costs involved, the Department will pay to each Junior member to each Junior Farmers' Association taking part in the project, with results being based on 10 pigs per litter, $5 cents per pig, whey, 15 cents per cwt.

The project is not a contest basis, on the lowest feed cost records, or the speed in which the finished hogs are marketed, but will be used to determine the actual costs of producing hogs under average farm conditions.

To assist with the costs involved, the Department will pay to each Junior member to each Junior Farmers' Association taking part in the project, with results being based on 10 pigs per litter, 90 cents per pig.

The committee for the county is Burton Sharpe, Pres. of Hastings County Junior Farmers' Association and Ch. Man.; Allan Ketcheson, Sec. Treas. of Hastings County Junior Farmers' Assoc. and R. J. Fair, Agric. Representative.

Conference Between Churchill, Roosevelt In Planning Stage

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Aug. 21 — (C.P.) — A conference between Prime Minister Churchill and Prime Minister Churchill is in the planning stage, the time and place depending upon the fortune of war.

Because of the forthcoming presidential elections Mr. Roosevelt probably would not leave the country. A projected visit to the European front, until after the voting.

But if the present indications that he meet Mr. Churchill before that time. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in the conference would be held at some point where the president would not come into contact with large numbers of American forces.

A year ago Prime Minister Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill held their historic meeting at Quebec. Some observers here foresee the possibility of another meeting in Canada.

For the President to go to Europe now would possibly be criticized from his political opponents. And if he did visit Britain it would be virtually certain he would go into France if not to Italy, to visit the American troops.

Political opponents would claim that gave him an advantage over Republican nominee, Thomas E. Dewey, in relation to the overseas soldier vote.

There is, however, the possibility that Mr. Roosevelt might decide to visit the forces in action and would be willing to run the risk. Observers make such a trip if the same facilities were accorded the Republican candidate.

Four Super-Forts Lost in Big Raid On Jap Homeland

Washington, Aug. 21 (AP) — American aircraft carriers dealt Japan proper its first double blow Sunday, striking war industries on the home islands in their second day of carrier raids.

The 20th. Air Force, banning only the industrial area of Yawata and a target, said results of the day raid were "good." Its communique said four of the big B-29's were lost in the attack.

The Tokyo radio, as usual, minimized the effects of the raids, claiming damage "negligible" and claiming 28 planes destroyed in the first and 66 destroyed in the first raid. It also asserted that 20 parachuting American airmen were captured. The Japanese broadcasts said the first raid hit Kyushu four other cities on Kyushu, the southernmost main island, Omura, Sasebo, Kokura and Yawata. The latter, site of numerous heavy industries, has been hit twice previously.

Possibility that a big naval base also was the target was seen in the Japanese statement that both raids were directed at "Ocean-going ships and the western Choguku district."

The office of war information identified Choguku as Honshu, Nippon's naval base on the main island of Honshu. The German D.N.B. agency, which relayed the Japanese broadcasts, identified the area as the island of Shikuku, east of Kyushu.

The 20th. Air Force, noting that the initial attack was the first daylight operation over Japan proper since the Doolittle raid, was headed by 1A-Gen. James Doolittle April 1942, last of the communique on results of the second foray.

Intake Figure Does Not Take Into Discharges Into Consideration

NOVA SCOTIA LEADS

Ottawa, Aug. 21. (CP) — Intake from the nine provinces into the Canadian Armed forces from the start of the war to March 31, 1944, totalled 913,929 or 26.9 per cent of the estimated 3,414,000 men in the military 18-to-46 years age groups, the Department of National Wartime Information Board.

In addition 15,236 was taken in outside Canada, thus bringing the total intake to 928,318.

The intake figure does not take discharges into consideration and must not be confused with the actual strength of the armed- forces, 736,900, June 30.

Previous figures have been broken down by military districts, but today's were the first released by province. They showed Nova Scotia with a total intake of 56,118 of its 125,000 military age males including the 5,000 permanently unfit or 45.6 . Quebec with a total of 154,500 or 24.6 per cent of its 628,000 males trailed with a percentage of 22.1.

B.C. Second.

Behind Nova Scotia came Ontario with a million-man population of 530,000 had 209,839 volunteers while Quebec with 699,000 eligible males had 80,634.

Quebec took in 46,443 draftees compared to Ontario's 41,582.

The compilation also showed that in the period since Sept. 30, 1943, when the last compilation was dated the percentage of Canadian manhood of military age drawn into the net necessarily remained the same, moved up from 35.1 to 36.8. The new all-Canada total of 913,929 compared with the previous total of 897,590.

No Clear-Cut Political Issue Faces Govt. on Which To Call An Election

By FRANK PLANKETT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Ottawa, Aug. 21 —(CP)—Out of the long debates of the recent session of parliament has come a wealth of speculation over the next federal general election, but no clear-cut issue on which that election might be sought.

An analysis of party platforms and statements by party leaders in recent months tends to indicate that rarely, if ever, in Canadian history have the principal political organizations been closer together in their basic views.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King, who repeatedly has said the election will not be held before the end of the war before the statutory expiry of the term of the present parliament next April, is expected to lead the Liberal party into the campaign with an appeal for a broad program of social and economic reconstruction.

It will be presented as a program designed to enable Canada to fill her place in the world as the greatest of the smaller nations and potentially a great nation.

Flavor of Nationalism.

That it may be flavored with a touch of nationalism was indicated when Mr. King declared himself in the Commons to favor the adoption of a Canadian flag and a Canadian National Anthem after the war.

That the appeal will be in tune with the broad aims of the United Nations for closer co-operation among all nations and with the special objective of the British commonwealth nations for preservation of their common association who has been indicated.

To date, however, there has come no challenge of governmental policies from the opposition which is considered likely to create an issue.

Premier George Drew of Ontario has attacked family allowances, put forward by Mr. King as the cornerstone in the structure of social security he hopes to complete for the post-war period.

If Premier Drew's views were shared by the Progressive Conservative Party in the national sphere this might create an issue, but the Progressive Conservative members in parliament supported the measure.

While family allowances are not mentioned in the official platform of the Progressive Conservative Party, that organization is on record as in accord with the principle that federal funds should be used to provide welfare services throughout Canada.

Find Common Ground.

As the end of the parliamentary session approached, the two major parties seemed to find common ground on Empire relations, a subject which promised an issue earlier over the question of an empire council or secretariat.

When some opposition members urged a strengthening of the Empire through creation of some central organization to unite on a common policy, Mr. King quoted Mr. Bracken as saying a policy he considered not greasy different from his own, which is that the empire can be strong only through its different parts exercising the most complete freedom with consultation and frequent exchanges of views.

Later, Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, said no one would suggest any empire arrangement whom would lessen Canadian autonomy and also quoted Mr. Bracken to show that there was not a great difference between his own leader and Mr. King.

Between the C. C. F. and the two older parties there will be a clear issue in that the C. C. F. places first importance on public ownership and control and the others place first importance on the encouragement of private enterprise.

Neither of the old parties, however, on its written official statements or the speeches of its leaders is prepared to reject a widening of the sphere of governmental activity where it may be necessary to achieve "full employment and a high level of national income."

Between the social credit party and the other three parties there also is a clash of emphasis, although not of objectives. That party places emphasis on monetary action as the decisive factor in adjusting the economy of the nation to provide the maximum in happiness and welfare for the people. The other parties regard monetary action and policy as only one of many agents to be employed.

ALLIES HURL GERMANS BACK ON LOWER SEINE
ALLIES ADVANCE INTO TOULON SAYS BERLIN

Vast New Pocket Being Developed By Four Armies

Enemy Casualties in Falaise Trap Will Total 100,000

By WES GALLAGHER, AP WAR CORRESPONDENT

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 22 —(AP)— Four Allied armies in slicing offensives gaining up to 16 miles, rolled disorganized Germans back upon the bridgeless lower Seine river today, fashioning a vast new pocket between the Allies and the American bridgehead flung over the river northwest of Paris.

Canadian, British and American armies struck eastward in this enveloping push, and the U. S. 3rd Army crunched in from the other flank in a drive northward to the Seine. The nearly-bled German 7th Army struggled frantically to pull across the looping Seine river by boat.

Front dispatches declared the enemy was so disorganized he had been unable to make any co-ordinated stand or launch strong counter-thrusts.

Allies Advance 10 Miles.

At least 200,000 Germans will be accounted for in captured, killed and wounded when operations are completed in the Argentan-Falaise trap in Normandy, Allied officers said today.

The 1st Canadian Army advanced four to 10 miles on a broad front between the east Argentan-Falaise main route Cahoung on the Dives Estuary, 26 miles across water from Le Havre.

Netherlanders fought in the outskirts of Hindlapk, British troops gaining 30 miles, seized Gace, 15 miles east of Argentan, and American armies can list another big pounding in toward the Seine."

The U. S. 3rd Army was hitting westward and northward from the bridgehead at Mantes 25 miles northwest of Paris. Here it could strike also north of the Seine into the rocket gun lair of the Calais coast.

Thirty thousand prisoners had been taken in the Falaise trap, with thousands more throwing up their hands. The dead were yet uncounted. Pocketed Germans had been virtually wiped out.

Front dispatches said Field Marshal Von Kluge prematurely had pulled out a large part of his forces, but they were by no means saved as yet.

Supreme Headquarters gave no news of the bridgehead at Mantes-Gassicourt, or to one southeast of Paris near Fontainebleau, where U. S. forces were 30 miles from the historic Marne.

The Germans lost 30 tanks and 16 planes, trying to protect forces fleeing north of the Seine above Mantes, front reports said. The Americans strengthened their trip hammer, and patrolled northward toward Paris. Substantial gains were scored southward of Paris.

Airfield Seine Many Cities.

Reports that French patriots were seizing city after city in Central and Southern France, including Lyons gave a clearer indication that the Gestapo-dominated German High Command was capable of effectively organized resistance in the Allies only in Northwestern France.

But it was precisely the Nazi defenses in that section of France which the U. S. 3rd Army's Seine bridgehead northwest and southeast of Paris were threatening, including the Pontoise-Cergy area and the Pas de Calais.

In the area of Dreux, 45 miles southwest of the heart of Paris, Lt.-Gen. Patton's Army troops have tightened their flank positions against the Germans, shoving them back toward the sea and the Seine. The Germans had thrown up flank protection and were fighting vigorously along the Avre in that area.

A front dispatch said there are indications that many Allied men and captured may run much higher than present figures, particularly the number of Germans still in the bag by virtue of gunsmoke.

The British 2nd Army, the 1st Canadian Army and the American 1st Army were busy wiping out the last Germans in the pocket and there was a prospect that another 24 hours may see the end of the pocket entirely.

25 Miles to Sea.

The Canadian army push on a front of about 25 miles from Falaise sea toward Argentan virtually was completed but the British 2nd and American 1st army in present operations

Belgian troops captured Cahoury, said a field dispatch, and Netherlanders, also with the 2nd Allied clan army, are in the outskirts of Hindlapk. Heuvelpoort and Dives Bur-Mer has been captured. Fall of Domile also was confirmed.

Troarn, 6 miles northeast within one mile of the road junction of Lisieux and a Canadian column is operating in the Vimoutiers area, 15 miles north-east of Trun and 15 miles southeast of Lisieux.

An advance of 10 miles east from Chambois took Gace, 11 miles southeast of Vimoutiers, driving another deep salient in the German rear-guards.

In the vicinity of Mantes and Gassicourt, the area of the American bridgehead 25 miles north-west of Paris, American forces clashed with counter-attacking units of the British German units which had made good their escape crossing and were fleeing north from the river. In these engagement the Americans destroyed 30 enemy tanks and shot down 41 planes, a field dispatch said.

Reconnaissance and Allied operations to their lowest point in many weeks and allowed the Germans time to get equipment and men out of the lower end of the Falaise and Seine on choked roads and over their large bottleneck on the Seine.

Says Combined Allied Blow Will Finish Germany

By RODGER D. GREENE

With the 1st Canadian Army Advancing toward the Seine, Aug. 22 (AP)—A British headquarters officer said today that "one good sledgehammer blow by the Russians, coupled with our efforts in the west, will finish" the war with Germany.

"The days of great battle in France are ended," the officer declared, "the rest of the war for Germany is merely a fight for time—time for them."

Yesterday, Gen. Montgomery declared the "end of the war is in sight."

Intelligence reports said the Germans already had turned guns on the Maginot line about 10 forty miles of outflanking Allied armies.

The British officer said that never again can Germany put into the field an army of 300 divisions such as the 7th Army which the Allied forces have broken up in the "Battle of the Normandy Bulge."

American Thrust Across the Seine Upsets German Defence Strategy

By JAMES M. LONG
(A.P. War Correspondent.)

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 22 (AP)—The whole German strategy of defense in the northwestern theater has been upset by the American 3rd Army's thrust across the Seine river 36 miles northwest of Paris, which is twisting the German front like a corkscrew and has cut and is still cutting and threatening to back it against the sea.

This bridgehead at Mantes also opens a path for an outflanking drive on the Germans' firing lines and launching sites in the Pas De Calais, 90 miles to the north.

In setting up the robot bases and the long coastal fortifications in the Pas De Calais, the area of France closest to England, the Germans apparently had calculated that the Allied invasion would come head on against their positions there. But the Allies picked the Normandy coast instead.

Deepening of the new wedge at Mantes would force the enemy's

RUSSIANS STORM ACROSS BUG R. N. E. OF WARSAW

Grave New Flanking Threat in Prolonged Siege of Polish Capital

NAZIS MAKE ADVANCE

By EDDY GILMORE
(Associated Press War Writer.)

Moscow, Aug. 22 (AP)—Russian troops stormed across the Bug river northeast of Warsaw today in a grave new flanking threat in the prolonged siege of Polish capital and had hastily mustered German reserves on the west bank of the Vistula.

Forging of the Bug, which flows 100 miles to the Vistula north of Warsaw, posed a threat to cross the larger river, isolate Russian bridgeheads southward toward the confluence of the streams. He launched against furious German counter-attacks from 30 heavily captured villages in what appeared to be the greatest threat to the Warsaw in nearly two weeks.

An Press Daily.

An Izvestia dispatch from "northeast of Praga," the industrial eastern suburb of the Polish capital, said the Germans had introduced a new tank division from Italy and several divisions from other sectors, including Germany itself.

Nazi counter-attacks were reported strongest yesterday by their air force, by large concentrations of artillery and by groups of 100 to 150 infantry men who hurled themselves after wave, 10 or 12 times a day," Izvestia said.

The Germans have won back a limited connection with two battered Baltic armies, isolated for three weeks in Estonia and Latvia, but the corridor included but one road use the corridor for an escape attempt to Reich proper rather than for reinforcement.

Another Grave Threat.

Another growing threat to Warsaw was in the Sandomiers region southeast of Warsaw on the mid-Vistula southeast. The survival of only 1,000 Germans, the Soviet killing of 12,000 in the Sandomiers trap where three divisions were annihilated, has considered confirmation of the great shrinkage in Hitler's divisions.

PETAIN ARRESTED BY GESTAPO AT HEADQUARTERS

Reported Seized on Sunday Along With Number of Associates

MAQUIS ATTACK

Geneva, Aug. 22—(AP)—German Secret Police arrested Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, French "Chief of State," at his residence and headquarters at the Hotel Du Parc in Vichy, advices from France said today.

The 86-year-old hero of the Battle of Verdun in the First Great War and head of the German-dominated Vichy government of France since 1940, was reported seized Sunday morning along with a number of associates.

Others reported arrested were Gen. Bridoux, possibly the Vichy War Secretary Lt.-Gen. Eugen Bridoux, an Admiral Rebaut; one Rochat, general secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; and Bernard Menetrel, private secretary to Petain.

Refused German Request

The most reliable sources said that Petain refused a German request to go with Pierre Laval, chief of Government, to the new provisional capital of Belfort, and that the old Marshal was summarily arrested by force. Where he is was not known absolutely, although most guesses were that he is in Germany. Thus the old Chief of State became officially what he has been in effect for a long time—a prisoner of the Nazis.

The Vichy regime is "finished," the Basle National Zeitung commented. The Swiss minister to Vichy is returning home and relinquishing France will henceforth be considered through Berlin.

Reports from the French underground said the Maquis were attacking Vichy at about the time of the seizure, had actually taken parts of the provisional capital and were arresting collaborationists.

The swift reported action of the gestapo seemed in indication the Germans placed no trust in the Marshal.

Arrested Swiftly

Petain was arrested so swiftly he was not given time to shave and change to his German destination.

A Swiss radio broadcast said Petain "was able to write a short letter to Laval, copies of which are circulating in France." The broadcast, however, did not say if it was information came from "most reliable quarters."

Pierre Laval, Vichy "chief of government," whom Petain once discharged for overzealous collaboration with the Germans, was reported installed in Belfort near the German frontier—a city once considered an anchor of the old Maginot line. Petain put over Laval under German pressure in April, 1942, and the former Premier swiftly assumed many of Petain's governmental prerogatives.

CITY OF FLORENCE FULLY OCCUPIED BY ALLIED TROOPS

Extensive Damage by the Enemy Has Been Avoided by Allied Skill, Patience

PATROLS PUSH ON

Rome, Aug. 22 (AP)—Florence has been completely occupied by Allied troops and 8th army patrols now are pushing out beyond the famed art center's northern outskirts, Gen. Alexander's headquarters announced today.

Explaining the delay in ousting the last enemy opposition from the northern edges of Florence, the Allied command said:

"Hard fighting of the 8th army forced their way into the city before the enemy had been completed to withdraw from the town by our continued pressure on his flanks, street fighting would inevitably have broken out. By skill and patience this has been fallen into our hands and extensive damage, apart from demolitions effected by the enemy, has been avoided.

"Unless the enemy decides to engage the city with long range artillery fire the city will rapidly return to normal and full assistance will be brought to the inhabitants by the AMG.

"When the time is ripe Allied armies will continue their advance, retired to know that the city has been spared irreparable damage."

Aside from brief artillery clashes and artillery duels, the only active sector of the Italian front continued to be the Adriatic flank.

On the inland portion of this sector Italian troops captured Santa Maria Carpineacta, three miles west of Pergola.

Nearer the coast Polish troops with tank support overcame strong enemy resistance north-east of Cersas in a day long battle enemy losses were heavy and the Poles took 100 prisoners.

The 8th army announced it had taken a total of 13,171 prisoners from May 11 to Aug. 1.

The German communique said the Allies were mounting a new offensive in the Adriatic sector of Italy and had captured several heights. The Allies are near the eastern outskirts of the gothic line south of Rimini.

OPPOSITION INCREASED

Canberra, Aug. 22 —(CP)— Continued counting of votes in Saturday's Western referendum today increased the total registering opposition to granting the Australian government additional sweeping powers for five years after the war.

The latest available figures were 1,786,899 against the measure and 1,536,767 in favor. The government's present virtually unrestricted powers will end automatically soon after the war is over.

COLLAPSE OF HUN RESISTANCE IN CITY AFTER CITY

Spanish Border News Tells of Successes By French in Centre And Southern France

NO WORD OF TOULOUSE

By CHARLES S. POLTZ
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Irun, Spain, Aug. 22, (AP)—Borderless told of the collapse of German resistance in one city and town after another throughout central and southern France today as French forces of the interior pressed a campaign to rid their country of the invaders.

While an Allied news confirmation here, however that the big Nazi base port of Toulouse, 80 miles north of the Spanish border, had fallen, Toulouse was reported to have a load garrison of 2,000 Germans led by fanatical S.S. (Elite Guard) forces.

French patriots were said to be tearing bridges, railroads and highways over which German legions in the Bordeaux area must fight their way to get through to the Reich.

The Vichy government is transferring the seat to another city, but German-controlled Vichy radio said, "Nothing important" would be done.

By the Associated Press, did not discuss the identity of the new police did it mention the whereabouts of Chief of State Marshal Petain.

Paris radio said the transfer was being carried out because of "the Anglo-American threat."

Say Vichy Virtually Surrendered.

(Reuters dispatch from Berne from interior France that French patriots themselves surrounded the puppet capital. There also have been reports that Pierre Laval and other Vichy officials have arrived at Belfort, about 35 miles from Basel, Switzerland, and an equal distance from Germany.)

Uniformed officers of the French army took possession of the international bridge at Hendaye yesterday evening at the time of the French committee of National Liberation's arrival in Bayonne and the occupation of the entire Pyrenees frontier.

Meanwhile, the Allied cruisers continued their patrol of the French Bay of Biscay coast from the Spanish frontier to the north.

Fredericton, Aug. 22 —(CP)— A forest fire to the western edge town of Moncton today was officially reported still dangerous for the city of Moncton.

P. M. Harrison of the New Brunswick Department of Lands and Mines said that the blaze in Albert county, 30 miles from Moncton was "burning fiercely" with more than 1,000 troops and civilian volunteers fighting the flames.

Thousands of Dispirited Prisoners Of War Clog Roads Leading to Rear

By WILLIAM STEWART
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army in France, Aug. 22 (By Canadian Press)—Thousands of dispirited soldiers of the shattered German 7th Army passed in a jumbled mass through Canadian Army lines all day today. Bootless they shuffled under the overwhelming the shuttle service of trucks operating to the front.

Some were still arm making frantic attempts to break out of the Falaise ring that has been forcibly strengthened, but their tanks are being knocked out and their German gunners meet them with withering fire over open sights.

The great majority of the Germans want only to surrender.

Many Canadian soldiers who were in the fierce bridgehead battles of a few weeks ago at the spectacle of a German army fallen to pieces is the most encouraging sight of the war. Canadians are lined along the muddy roads up which truckload after truckload of bedraggled humanity after column of Germans have been coming since yesterday morning.

Canadian officers say the defeat of the 7th Army to which the Canadians contributed the most successful back in the fighting in the Falaise area, records the Germans' worst defeat in the west.

Endless Allied naval armada off shore and land batteries on the north hundreds of miles south of the Spanish border, had fallen. Toulouse was reported to have a

Rome, Aug. 22 —(AP)— French troops of the 7th Army have fully encircled Toulon by land, cutting the last escape route for German garrison forces still resisting inside the fixed fortifications of the Mediterranean Naval Base, Allied Headquarters announced today.

Cardinal Maglione Dies Near Naples

Rome, Aug. 22 —(AP)— Luigi Cardinal Maglione, 67, papal secretary of state, died last night at Casetta near Naples after an illness of several weeks.

Vatican officials said death resulted from neuritis.

He had been a Cardinal since 1935 and Papal Secretary of State since 1939. Previously he had served as Papal Nuncio to Paris and Switzerland.

Mentioned as possible successors to Cardinal Maglione are Archbishop Alfredo Ottaviani, formerly state undersecretary, and Monsignor Filippo Bernardini, Papal Nuncio in Switzerland and nephew of the late Secretary of State, Pietro Cardinal Gasparri.

After occupying the important communications centre of Aix-en-Provence, 15 miles north of Marseille, American forces still were advancing and by midday yesterday were two miles along the road to the west.

Sealing up New Trap.

This drive and the French thrust on Marseille from the east—a drive which already has driven through Aubagne—were steadily setting up a trap for the German remaining in that French city, second only to Paris in size.

Front dispatch said the German had set a forest fire east of Marseille to cover the retreat of the French.

Capture of Aix-En-Provence, which commands a trunk highway leading directly south into Marseille, a 7th army column advancing westward along the south bank of the Durance river had paved the victory route to Puy yesterday morning and pushed on to retake some contact with an enemy force retreating toward the Rhone Valley, 30 miles distant.

Air Force Called Off.

The battery of the scattered Nazi forces was so complete in southern France, however, that the Allied command called off the planes which had been bombing and strafing available enemy troops and sent them back to their former task of cutting enemy communications in northern Italy and the Balkans.

Sweeping across the Durance Valley north-east of Aix-En-Provence, forces which already forces reached Grabels and Manosque in further westward advance. They reported to have enveloped the town of Valensole, 30 miles from Aix and approximately a third of the way to Lyon.

Seven miles north-east of Toulon's outskirts the French captured the fortress of Coudon.

The size or equipment of the German force still fighting inside Toulon was not disclosed. It appeared likely the defenders would attempt a last stand.

One correspondent with the Naval Task Force attached to the invasion of the toughness of the base's coastal defenses and the repeated when a French battleship scored a direct hit on a heavy gun turret, only to have it bounce back into action.

Somewhere in Southern France, Aug. 23 —(AP)— Lieut. Bill Lyon, jersey City, N.J., found a sedan abandoned by German garrison on D-Day. He traded it to Capt. Kenneth Barnaby, East Orange, N.J., for a few parts. Barnaby tried to ford the river in the car and tore out the undercarriage. He abandoned the motor. So he traded it to a French unit for one chicken and seven eggs. When last seen the sedan was being driven by an American truck driver. Details of the last trade were lacking.

On Monday night they were called to a rubbish blaze near Hooper's dock; on Sunday a fire on Yeo Motrs Street, and to top off the weekend activities were summoned to Bleecker Ave. where they were asked to shut off a waterpipe. Outside of that, everything was quiet.

Golfer Finds Friend's Pin Lost 2 Years Ago

Two years ago, that ardent golfing trio, Teddy Orr, "Shad" Burrows, and Jack McKeown, journeyed to the Bay of Quinte Country Club and shot themselves a round of golf.

After the game, Mr. Burrows leavine Mr. McKeown at his home, noticed that the latter's valuable golf pin was missing. Realizing that searching for the piece of jewelry, would be some degrees worse than hunting for the proverbial needle in the haystack, Mr. McKeown decided to write the pin off.

Last Friday, Mr. Burrows and Mr. Orr decided to play golf at the Country Club links. Mr. McKeown was to join them later.

He did. When he arrived, Mr. Orr asked him if he remembered the pearl tie-pin he lost two years ago. Mr. McKeown shrugged his shoulders.

Mr. Orr extended his hand, and there lay the pin.

When he and Mr. Burrows were returning to the club house, Mr. Orr noticed a small object shining in the sunlight. It was his pin.

It was found in the parking space near the club house locker rooms, where it possibly had been run over, and then trampled down by hundreds of cars and feet since its loss two years ago.

THOUSANDS

last stages of the destruction of the vanquished foe.

German soldiers from all kinds of formations are fleeing in disorder from the Canadian army lines by British and American troops pushing behind them. There are no more battles when the breaks-through were made and the Germans sadly and heavily.

The only Germans who want to fight are the SS troops and stormtroopers who refuse to believe their eyes and ears. Some of the German officers who represent the only element that wants to keep the orderly military fighting.

Many Terror Stricken.

The German medical service has to operate over roads thick with fleeing civilians. Many of the hordes of different get-ups from the light blue of the enemy air force to the dark-jacketed uniforms of the storm troops and panzer divisions.

All formations in the 7th Army are represented in the flights. Infantry divisions, base units, flak units, field punishment units and even bakery units.

The prisoners are soaked with rain. Thousands of German wounded have been given medical treatment and placed in ambulances that take them to casualty clearing stations and hospitals. Some of them have the attendance of their own medical officers, dressed in German uniforms.

In the small area of "the bottle" that remains to the enemy there is order. Rolling German convoys organize all kinds of slightly useful traffic. Soldiers in trucks and automobiles and mounted on hardly any remaining tanks and hardly know which way to go. The small remaining areas of the roads are littered with their dead comrades, their dead horses, their exploded and smashed transport.

There is food for the Germans have eaten the odd tins of food they carried in their pockets after the battle in the fields and dig up half-sized potatoes, shake the apples from the trees and, even when they can, shoot the scurrying rabbits and animals.

Great Piles of Equipment.

They looked forward to a safe arrival in the allied lines, where their disarmament has left piles of rifles, machine guns, ammunition, mortar cases, old letters and heaps of personal equipment.

Every Canadian battalion on the front has captured in the wake of Von Kluge's army is an arsenal of enemy equipment.

One Canadian infantry position held off four German Tiger tanks which struck in the flank of the prisoner stream today, destroying two of the tanks with anti-tank grenades and stopping the other two with pistol fire.

A Canadian Service Battalion estimated at one moment that it would have 20,000 prisoners in turn over to the shuttle service as the enemy stream grew and grew. Hundreds of Germans gave themselves up in little groups of ten Canadians.

Once the shuttle service threatened to clog essential traffic at one busy intersection, so a Canadian lieutenant-colonel with a driving headquarters staff joined the military policemen at the corner to help direct the traffic.

On the narrow, muddy roads there was difficulty in moving two lines of traffic in opposite directions, including those of tank army building, the forces of the Canadian army are getting ready for the tremendous battle for France.

New tanks are being hauled up and Canadian artillery units are being moved about and infantry formations swung around for their part in the developing push to the Seine.

United hospitals with their hundreds of equipment are being packed up and moved forward to the battle front, to make ambulance hauls shorter. Supply dumps are being shifted ahead.

RUSSIANS STORM

Large Crowd Attends Opening Rotary Carnival at C.P. Grounds

Augering well for the ultimate success of the attraction, a huge crowd of Belleville people thronged the Canadian Pacific grounds on the Front Street church street Monday night, to inaugurate the Rotary Carnival, that will be conducted by the ladies auxiliary Aug. 21 to August 26th.

Carnival, staged entirely by the Queen City shows is a colorful brilliantly lighted affair, that will provide entertainment in all phases of outdoor amusements.

Curiosity perhaps attracted the large crowd at an early hour, and by nine o'clock the grounds were packed with a milling mass of humanity from grandma to grandson, all bent on enjoying themselves.

Novelty rides proved to be one of the main attractions. There is a thrill-packed "Ride-o", that was patronized by many, especially the younger people. A whirling ride also 'came in for plenty of attention while the ever popular Ferris Wheel did a land-office business from the start of operations.

Merry-go-round Attraction

The weird, familiar music, that is the background of the ubiquitous merry-go-round attracted the youngsters. Many rides were accompanied by proud parents experienced the ride, that their grand children enjoyed with glee and which in fact some enjoy at the merry time.

A perpendicular serial ride furnished what real thrill seekers crave, plenty of swirling, twirling, its oblong-shaped cupola spun dizzily, and shrieks of excitement could be heard as occupants were "churned" high in the air.

Manning the rides are plenty of games with handsome prizes being awarded. One can ball game, an air-rifle, or darts. If he is basket minded, and possesses a steady "throwing arm" he can known down all kinds of ludicrous targets in the hope of winning the prowess.

Fortune Tellers on Hand

Or if one is a believer in the ancient art of forecasting the future, or bear hearing of his past, a fortune-teller will oblige.

On the grounds at the west side of South Church street, a colorful vaudeville act is staged. Here again are many rides, and new ones to be erected today.

The inner man is well taken care of for the sweet tastes of the children. Another reminder of Canada's days are the sweet tasty apples, which met with instant favor with Junior and his sister last night. Here too is popcorn, and candy floss. French fried potatoes are there for those with a serious appetite, as are the inevitable hot dogs and hamburgers.

A feature of the Carnival is the Rotary "Dollar Ride" which is a handsome Hindoo doll, covered with twenty-five one dollar bills. Rotarian Charles Symons is in charge of the ticket selling booth and did a fine business last night. The "ride" will be drawn for on Saturday night, the final night of the Carnival. This is the annual attraction of Rotary Carnivals and public interest is well accomplished in the already fine sale of tickets.

Staged Nightly

As has been mentioned before, the Carnival will be staged nightly until Saturday night, with the possible exception of Wednesday and Saturday. The fun is then and whatever else is staged is something along amusement and entertainment thus for every one and family.

The Belleville Rotary Club's work for the crippled children's fund of the district has become a byword in community activities of all kinds in the district. Funds are urgently needed to carry on this humane work on a large scale, and it is only through the generous response of the public that this work can be continued. The Rotary Club extends a cordial invitation to all, to attend their Carnival.

HUNS SURRENDER BY PLATOONS IN NORMANDY AREA

Pocket No Myth, Problem Is Handling Vast Number of Prisoners

MAY REACH 50,000

By ROSS MUNRO
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army in France, Aug. 22 — (CP) — Thirty thousand German prisoners were taken in the Normandy pocket by Allied forces up to two days ago and with mass surrenders now around Trun, southeast of Falaise, the figure is steadily rising and may easily reach 50,000.

The pocket in which divisions of Field Marshal Von Kluge's 7th army was caught is practically crushed.

Large numbers of enemy wounded also are in Allied hospitals and are not included in the prisoner count.

Yesterday the Canadian army collected 2,800 prisoners and that is just a preliminary figure. It will be higher.

Prisoners are coming in right and left and one Canadian brigade reported they surrendered in lots of 1,000 prisoners it wanted to get rid of, but that was unconfirmed.

Since the Canadian Army launched its first operation as an army on Aug. 8 down the Falaise highway it has captured 14,400 prisoners in two days ago.

Normandy Pocket

The Normandy pocket was no myth. Large German forces are caught and annihilated here by British, Canadian, American and Polish troops and there still is a mass of completely disorganized enemy fighting in a circle near Trun which will be finished off soon.

The problem is not one of fighting any more. It is one of handling prisoners in such vast numbers on the roads. The Germans now are sitting ducks. Many parts of their officers deserted them and tried to get out of the bag alone. It is principally infantry which has been taken during these last few days and which has escaped with armor.

As the final mop-up goes on in the pocket, new gains are being made along the whole Canadian army front, stretching north to the channel, as the eastward drive develops momentum.

A Canadian column is in the Vimoutiers area, 10 miles north-east of Trun, and infantry now dominate the town. Canadian infantry and Polish armor are mopping up in the Falaise-Chambois-Vimoutiers triangle where most of yesterday's bag of 2,800 prisoners was taken.

British Near Lisieux.

To the north of the Canadians, British armor and infantry are one mile from the important road junction of Lisieux, 18 miles south of the channel coast of Honfleur. Heavily-mined roads and some 88-mm. guns slowed progress towards Lisieux but the opposition was described by a Senior Canadian Officer as "nothing really serious." There have been a few scattered rearguard actions.

Other British troops are on the roads leading to Pont l'Eveque, 10 miles north of Lisieux.

On the channel coast sector the Germans are falling back fast. Belgian troops operating with the Canadian army captured Cabourg and Netherlands forces are in the outskirts of Houlgate. These advances have taken enemy rearguard range artillery pressure off Caen port, France's seventh largest. It is no secret this port has not been of much as yet to the Allies.

Robots Batter South England, Many Killed

London, Aug. 22. (AP)—The Nazis plastered London and are southern counties with flying bombs throughout the night as rescuers dug by the light of flares for victims of yesterday's heavy robot attack which left a huge, a tragic toll of life and property.

Despite the severity of the attacks, government officials at Canada non-essential persons to leave the London area continued to meet with a cool response, apparently due to a lack of confidence in promotion that the end of the war is near.

It was feared a heavy toll of life was taken when one of the robots struck an apartment house last night, burying many of the occupants under the debris. Rescuers at work with working with cranes this morning to lift great blocks of masonry.

POLICE BLOTTER

Bernard Kehoe and Leonard Napban, two Roslin lads drove into town in the latter's automobile yesterday, but before they returned home they had their trip had proved rather costly, by noon 'fell to be exact.

Kehoe was apprehended driving Napban's motor car when not in possession of a driver's license, Friday in city police court, held before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd Jackson, fined ten dollars and costs after pleading guilty to a charge of driving without a motor license. Napban admitted to permitting an unlicensed driver to operate his car and paid $12.75 and on a second charge of operating a motor vehicle with defective brakes Napban was assessed another $12.75, including costs. The lads were driven a week in which to pay the entire fines and costs.

Sent to Mercer.

Grace Hewton, Wellington girl, who was apprehended sleeping in a motor car on Campbell street last week, appeared on a charge of vagrancy today and was sentenced to serve ten days in the Mercer Reformatory in Toronto. Sentence was introduced by Crown Attorney B. C. Gorman presiding over Magistrate's Case Withdrawn.

Five motorist names were called, who had pleaded guilty to charges of intoxication and paid the conventional "ten and costs" prior to the court proceedings. Two of them were women. A charge of theft was withdrawn owing to the lack of witnesses.

THE KIDS WERE GENEROUS

Klamath Falls, Ore., Aug. 22 (AP) —Passersby on a downtown sidewalk stopped in their tracks when three youngsters began passing out $29 bills. "We've got plenty of money—have some," they said to one and all. A curious policeman stopped the spree, found the money was part of $800 E. Bonds theft reported he had lost. He got $602 back.

The War Today—
Thinks Hitler in His Desperation May Finally Use Poison Gas

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(AP War Analyst)

Gen. Montgomery's glowing optimistic message to the British armies under his command in Northwest France, declaring their victory over the foe "has been definite, complete and decisive," is a clarion call for the coup de grace—the "kill."

"Mopping still remains to be done," he says, "but it will now be done the more easily . . . The end of the war is in sight, let us finish off the business in record time."

Certainly the German hold on the vital English Channel coast and the rest of Northern France is in grave jeopardy. Lt.-Gen. Patton's establishment of bridgeheads across the Seine, on both sides of Paris, puts the Allies in a formidable position. Other forces have entered Hillerite forces still south of the river and to flank those to the north. "But it will not have to retreat toward his own frontier—indeed, bloody though it will be, the Allied air fleets will have a field day.

Without doubt we are witnessing one of the crucial victories of history.

Hitler has boldly admitted the magnitude of the German defeats. His own newspaper, Volkischer Beobachter, says the Nazis are going to withdraw from a big section of France. The reason, states the paper, is to gain time pending a "revolution in German armament production."

The Dictator's purpose in thus going on record is clear. In forecasting a great change for the better he is offering encouragement to the wretched German public. It's another version of his frequently repeated promise that he will provide secret weapons which will win the war.

That was a threat which many folk treated lightly until Hitler produced the terrible robot bomb. However, many observers have been fearing something much more terrible.

That's the use of poison gas.

Hitler is the arch-poisoner-gangster man. He has descended to unspeakable depths. Now he's desperate to the point of madness.

It would be foolish not to recognize that the grave danger of his using deadly gas.

Parade Prominent Collaborationist For Cameraman

By WILLIAM MILLER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Pierre Drieu La Rochelle, French Draguignan, Southern France, Aug. 22 — One of the biggest fish yet caught in the net of Southern France is a man identified as Fernand Boulsson, barrel-shaped, bald-headed, goateed former president of the Chamber of Deputies.

He was found hiding at the house of a friend four miles from St. Raphael and was jailed pending judicial procedure.

For safety, he was imprisoned at Draguignan, and yesterday the French partisans paraded him and other prisoners for the benefit of the French Information Service movie cameraman.

It was a bitter pill for the man who was 10 years mayor of Marseille and former National head of the Socialist Party. He was paraded with a motley throng of Gestapo spies and one woman whose head had been shaved for consorting with Germans.

A hugo crowd gathered around the gendarmerie and booed and jeered. Tough, bullet - partisans kept rifles and machine guns at the ready.

Boulsson, who was Merchant Marine Minister in the last war and who became Marshal Petain's Information minister, and later joined Laval and Doriot in the Collaborationist Paris Daily L'Oeuvre, had his head down during the short walk.

Boulsson was Premier of France for five days. The cabinet he formed May 31, 1935, collapsed June 4.

Finally He Was Just Out

Havana, Ill., Aug. 22 —(AP)— A Havana druggist posted the following sign on his door this week: Out of ice cream; Out of sherbert; Out of cigarettes; Out of rum; Out of time; Out of stamps; Out of patience; Out of town! His customers also knew his soldier son was home on furlough.

WEATHER FORECAST

Lake Superior: Moderate to fresh winds; fair today and Wednesday and becoming a little cooler.

Kenora and Rainy River: Fair today and Wednesday; cool tonight.

Manitoba and Saskatchewan: Fair today and Wednesday; quite cool tonight.

ALLIES PRESS ON TO RHONE VALLEY

Allied armored columns and troops are reported to be driving from their beachhead (black area) in the south of France toward the strategic Rhone valley. The successful outcome of this push will bring about the flanking of Toulon and Marseilles and the eventual capture of the vital supply centre of Avignon. The taking of the city would tie up the entire Nazi communication centre in the vicinity.

Letter From Eire

By J. H. MURDOCH
(CP Correspondent)

Dublin, Aug. 22 —(CP)— One of Eire's most difficult problems, from the comparative lateness of marriage among young men hope to be seriously tackled soon after the war ends. This is a curious social evil which Eire appears to have all to herself among modern civilized countries and even among English-speaking countries.

Statistics "late" marriages are almost all in agricultural areas and that city dwellers have no problem in the matter. Here the job is to be tackled nobody appears to know.

Recently the Minister for Finance Minister Sean T. O'Kelly confessed that the government had no ready remedy.

Prime Minister De Valera has suggested that the creation of "dower" houses on farmsteads 36,000 were married; 103,558 single and 31 widowed. Of the 94,000 men between 30 and 34 years, 58,700 were unmarried as of the 89,000 women of the same ages, 36,000 were single.

Eire is the only civilized country in which the population has fallen consistently for the last 100 years; a century ago, the country had a population of more than 6,000,000, not counting the six counties of Northern Ireland. Today, the population is just under 3,800,000.

farm. The son or daughter has to wait until the old people die until he or she can see the way to get married. Trouble is that many of the country's population.

In most countries of European countries, in Britain, the United States and in Canada, the average age at which people get married is from 22 years to 26. In Eire, a big percentage of the men marry after they are unmarried at 35.

In the last census, that of 1936, there were 134,680 men in the country between the ages of 30 and 34. Of these only 40,980 were married; 129,529 were single and 53 were widowers. Of the women between the same ages and sexes of these in Eire were married; 103,558 single and 31 widowed. Of the 94,000 men between 30 and 34 years, 58,700 were unmarried as of the 89,000 women of the same ages, 36,000 were single.

Iasi Evacuated By the Germans

London Aug. 22 —(AP)— Bast, fourth largest city of Romania, has been evacuated before a fresh Russian offensive in the south, the Germans announced today.

Iasi (pop: 104,671) lies west of the Prut River and is a meeting point of railways linking Eastern Romania and the Soviet-claimed province of Bucovina.

It lies 195 miles northeast of the great Plesesti oil centre and 120 miles north of Galati, strategic city on the lower Danube. A Russian plunge to Galati would make much of the Balkans untenable for German defence.

Moscow has reported no fresh offensive in Northern Romania, which the Red army invaded during the winter campaign. Germany has been reporting the new offensive for several days.

A Berlin broadcast said the Russians had "succeeded in widening their breaches" at other undisclosed points in a dual offensive on both sides of Iasi and on the lower Dnestr River.

Christmas Trees Will Be Scarce

Ottawa, Aug. 22 (CP)—There won't be many gaily-bedecked Christmas trees twinkling in Canadian homes this yuletide.

That's the word today from the labor, transport and munitions departments and the Prices Board. They said in a joint statement that recent war developments have put "enormous pressure" on railways, which have been prohibited from carrying Christmas trees in flat or open-top cars or in box cars suitable for transporting grain, feed and other essential commodities.

Selective Service officers are being instructed to refuse work permits for Christmas tree cutting, and no special permits will be granted truck operators to transport the trees.

Individual farmers will not be restrained from cutting trees, but Timber Controller A. H. Williamson urged farmers to produce firewood wherever practicable because over-all stocks of wood fuel still are below normal and fuel is a "national problem."

He is survived by his widow, Anne, an employee in the New York office of Reuters.

Stringer was the 36th Allied war correspondent killed during this war. The death of Tom Treanor, correspondent for the Los Angeles Times and the NBC, brought on the road to Paris, was announced yesterday.

Germans Report Allied Planes Over Hungary

London, Aug. 22 —(AP)— Britain-based Allied aircraft, largely grounded yesterday, remained immobilized by adverse weather during the night and there was no indication when they might resume their devastating assaults upon the retreating German armies in Northern France.

The German radio, however, reported Allied bomber formations over Hungary yesterday, indicating the Mediterranean air forces were busy.

Some daylight raiders, a Berlin broadcast said, penetrated into German Alpine areas. Germans also reported bombers over Vienna.

Japs Speculate On Source of Raids By Superforts

New York, Aug. 22 —(AP)—The U. S. superfortress raids on the Japanese homeland Sunday were the main topic of discussion at a meeting of Premier Kuniaki Koiso's cabinet today, the Tokyo radio announced in a broadcast recorded by the Federal Communications Commission.

Reports on the raids, in which Japan was hit by day and night blows were given by War Minister Gen. Sugiyama, Home Affairs Minister Shigeo Odachi and Munitions Minister Giichi Aoki, the broadcast said.

Another Japanese broadcast recorded by The Associated Press quoted the Tokyo newspaper Asahi as speculating that the superfortresses which made the raids might have taken off from bases in India, refuelled at Chengtu in China's Szechwan Province and then flown to Japan.

The Japanese Domei Agency said Allied aircraft yesterday raided Truk in the Central Carolines and the Island of Yap, some 50 miles southwest of Guam.

Brother, Should You Spend a Dime?

A dime is small change! (10¢) But when a lot of dimes march out of your pocket they soon become dollars that start to fight other dollars for the new neckties, dresses or furniture left for us to buy. This battle of the dollars is called INFLATION because it starts prices rising! And the higher prices go...the less your dollar is worth! For instance, during the last war, people had to pay (33¢) for sugar that you get for (5¢) today. A voile night dress was ($16.95) compared to the ($4.95) you pay now. Your dollar buys more goods, is worth more than the dollar of 1914-18. Price ceilings and other anti-inflationary measures have helped keep it's value high. And remember! Every time you use your money wisely to pay off a debt (33¢) or to increase your savings when you refuse to hoard goods or patronize black markets...it makes your dollars worth MORE!

Make This Pledge Today!

I promise to give my support to keeping the cost of living down. I will buy only, what I need. I will observe the ceiling whether buying or selling goods or services. I will pay off old debts, save for the future, invest in Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates. And I will support taxes which help lower the cost of living.

Keep Your Dollar Value High!

Nearer Conclusion of Task

The world has the word of Prime Minister Churchill that "behind the German lines weakness and division are spreading and everywhere there are signs of internal decay and dull apathy overtaking the weary though "the enemy is still active and strong and the Germany army still fights with the relics of its old efficiency."

Battles which are raging fiercely will bring the end of the war that much closer he told Canadian tank men. "One of the great hopes is that conclusion of our toil may be much nearer."

Montgomery's Optimism

"The Lord mighty in battle has given us the victory. The news is good from all war fronts all over the world. The end of the war is in sight; let us finish off the business in record time."

So spoke General Sir Bernard Montgomery in his special message to the Allied troops. The Allies have "written off the powerful German force that was causing so much trouble." He told the troops on August 11th that this must be done and it has already been done.

The war is moving at a terrific pace. Allied victory in Northwest France is definite, complete, decisive. The Air Force had taken full toll of opportunities the like of which he said he doubted have ever been so great. Without support and the brave and brilliant work of the airborne pilots which have aroused the greatest admiration, "our soldiers could have achieved no success," said General Montgomery.

He made it clear that the utmost harmony and co-operation exist and as a British general he praised the soldiers of the Empire and expressed the highest admiration for the "brave fighting qualities of the American armies in the opening stages of the break-in battle of July 25th and the following days. He praised their great achievements during the weeks on the right flank almost to the gates of Paris. "We never want to fight alongside better soldiers," was his comment. The highest praise was also given the fighting qualities and tenacity of the British, Canadian and Polish troops on the western flank.

The motto, "One for all and all for one," is the proper one and it is the Allied motto.

While much remains to be done, what has been done will make this more easy.

The world is witnessing the greatest confederation of nations engaged in destroying the enemy of peace and concord. Perfect harmony of the various nations exists. Something is being done which Hitler and his tyranny never could do because he has not the people low love liberty and the selfless devotion of Allied nations to the cause of right and justice is something a Hitler cannot understand.

City of Orleans,

Names of cities and other place names which have held a name in history and which will never be forgotten are appearing in great number in the war news from the French fronts. These are proof of the great place which France has played in mediaeval history and in modern history and offer the greatest assurance and proof that France which is now being liberated will assume her full place among the nations.

Wherever one goes in France he finds history has been written since the old Roman era in Gaul. Not long ago the name of St. Malo was on the lips of the correspondents at the front for from here came the great explorer and colonizer Jacques Cartier whose name is associated with Canada. The last news from this town was that it has been surrendered by the Huns as the "mad" German commander who was pledged to hold out to the end yielded when food ran out.

Another name is forever associated with one of the great figures in history, the Maid of Orleans, Joan of Arc. Her name is assured of immortality of fame and with it the city of Orleans. This city was liberated last Friday by a spearhead force of the United States army. There is another name connected with this famous girl, the River Loire where the forces of the Maid of Orleans triumphed and raised the siege of the city. Orleans is on the famous river and is the natural centre of communication and traffic between the Loire area and Paris. Twenty centuries ago at Orleans there was a town found by a great statesman and soldier, Julius Caesar. Orleans has been the seat of French kings and French dukes have borne the name of the city. The city was famous in the mediaeval period and in the Renaissance days.

Orleans of all cities of France has one of the most romantic of histories. Near here a girl was born at Domremy, one whose mystery is still intriguing for all mankind. Strangely enough Orleans has been swept by the new era in war caused by the most brutal and vicious figure the world has known, Hitler, who is spiteful, malevolent, bitter of everything that stands for justice and fairness among men. Now the news comes of the liberation of Orleans from this Hun. Orleans is blessed in the memory of a patriotic and heroic girl, whose life was given for freedom, and who has been honored with sainthood and whose name will endure. For over five centuries the world has wondered over her and the time can never remove her charm for those who love right and freedom. This girl stood for freedom as the United Nations world stands today and it is an intense satisfaction that the city associated with her name has again been redeemed from the barbaric possession of the Huns.

Surely the name of Adolf Hitler who is responsible for the deaths of many French men, women and children through war, will be held in execration by the great body of mankind down the ages.

Today Joan occupied is still standing. Orleans was taken and retaken during the Franco-Prussian War. Once again it has been recovered from German aggression. A large equestrian statue of the Maid looks down upon the liberated city.

It is an augury that the French people cannot overlook. It forecasts the complete liberation of France and the overthrow of Nazism.

Historic Seal Found

Discovery of a short piece of tubing similar to a section of gas pipe apparently has provided the British Museum with a link to a past 3,000 years old. The find, made from a box of odds and ends in a cottage at Ipswich, England, is believed to be a Babylonian seal. The antique object was found in his brother's cottage by R. E. Everard, who was about to discard the tubing when he noticed a series of strange wedge-shaped characters and two figures. Everard took his find to Guy Maynard, curator of the Ipswich Museum, who bought it as an exhibit, and after further inspection sent it to the British Museum. The wedge-shaped characters are ancient Cuneiform writing.

Whatever is in store for men like Laval and Quisling, the world feels no interest in except to see them brought to judgment for their actions as collaborationists. Other Norwegians and Frenchmen took the place of danger by their deeds of loyalty and devotion, risked their lives in the underground movements of their countries' patriots, while Laval and Quisling clasped the hand of Hitler.

For four years these men have served the Nazis. What will Hitler do for them as retribution comes to their door, when he has so much to do about his own precarious case?

Eloquence is logic on fire.—Beecher.

CRANKMIRE ON POST-WAR

Said Old Crankmire one day as we chatted at tea:
"There isn't much doubt what this world is to be.
Men are gaining in wisdom and piling up things
And living on money a day's labor brings.
We're a home-loving people, and when the war's won
We'll all want to do what we always have done.

"The boys who come back, once they've rested, will turn
The money to marry and live on to earn;
For homes of their own they will work day by day,
The wise will succeed and the foolish will stray.
There'll be weddings to go to and births, as of old,
And christenings and burials and bells being tolled.

"The young will be seekers of fortune once more,
Nor will it be easier to find than before.
There'll be problems to solve;
There'll be hardships to bear;
There'll be picnics to go to and days at the fair;
There'll be need for high faith when the battle guns cease,
For these, after all, are the blessings of peace."

Soldiers Are Sometimes Made Out Of the Strangest People Says Pyle

(By ERNIE PYLE)

On the Western Front—(by wire, less—Soldiers sometimes are made out of the strangest people.

I've recently made a new friend—just a plain old Hoosier—who is so quiet and humble you would hardly know he was around. Yet in our few weeks of invasion he has killed four of the enemy, and he has learned war's wise little ways of destroying life and preserving your own.

He hasn't become the ruthless type that's developed in some soldiers; he has merely become adjusted to an unpleasant necessity of fession.

His name is George Thomas Clayton. Back home he is known as Tommy. In the Army he is sometimes called George, but usually just Clayton. He is from Evansville, where he lived with his sister. He is a front-line infantryman of a rifle company in the 29th Division.

By the time this is printed he will be back in the lines. Right now he is out of combat for a brief rest. He spent a few days in an Army "repple-depple" camp, and was assigned briefly to the camp where I work from—a camp for correspondents. That's how we got acquainted.

* * *

Clayton is a private first class. He operates a Browning automatic rifle. He has turned down two chances to become a buck sergeant and squad leader, simply because he would rather keep his powerful B.A.R. than have stripes and less personal protection.

He landed in Normandy on D-Day, on the toughest of the beaches, and was in the line for 37 days without rest. He had innumerable narrow escapes.

Twice, 88s hit within a couple hundred lengths of him. But both times the funnel of the concussion was away from him and he didn't get a scratch, though the explosions covered him and his rifle with dirt.

Then a third one hit about 10 feet away, and made him deaf in his right ear. He had always had trouble with that ear, from earaches and things as a child. Even in the Army back in America he had to beg the doctors to waive the ear defect in order to come overseas. He is still a little hard of hearing in that ear from the shell burst, but it is gradually coming back.

When Tommy finally left the lines he was pretty well done up and his sergeant insisted he send him to a hospital, but he begged not to go for fear he wouldn't get back to his old outfit again. So he let him go to a rest camp instead and two days after he ended up here with us (provided the correspondents don't drive him frantic) he will return to the lines with his old outfit.

Clayton has worked at all kinds of things back in that other world of civilian life that we have a term for, hand, a cook and a bartender. Just before he joined the Army he was a gauge-boxer in the Chrysler Ordnance Plant at Evansville.

When the war is over he wants to go into business for himself for the first time in his life. He is probably set up a small restaurant in Evansville. He said his brother-in-law would back him.

* * *

Tommy was shipped overseas after only two months in the Army, and now has been over here for 18 months. He is medium-sized, dark-haired, has a little mustache and the funniest-looking head of hair you ever saw this side Buffalo Bill's circus.

While his division was killing time in the last few days before leaving England, he and three others decided to have their hair cut Indian fashion. They had their heads clipped down to the skin all except a long ridge starting at the forehead and running clear to the back of the neck. It makes them look more comical than ferocious, and they have been razzing your food. IMMEDIATE DENTURE SERVICE

It was formerly the practice of dentists to extract teeth and then wait perhaps several months for gums to heal and become firm and shrink to a more or less permanent form and then, before making dentures or plates.

Competent dentists today install plates, not just temporary ones, but the plates the patient will wear permanently, immediately after extraction of teeth, before the patient leaves the office.

This is called "immediate denture service."

In most instances the plates or other dentures so installed will require minor adjustment or partial remaking, in all instances the patient will require further care and attention by the dentist, and in some instances the patient continues wearing the same dentures without interruption or too much discomfort from the hour of extraction.

There is a more cogent reason for immediate denture service than mere personal appearance, although that part is important, particularly for those whose livelihood is at stake, for the psychological effect on personally engaged in business, profession or as an artist to have no visible teeth for weeks and months.

Atrophy, which is worsening is the inevitable consequence of disuse of muscles, and it makes little difference what part is affected are those used in buttoning your collar, or those in masticating your food. The atrophy, unfortunately, involves not only the muscles but also the sense structures, thanes, glands or organs whose function is impaired or retarded.

This atrophy begins early, within a week or less, and progresses gradually, once the muscles are no longer used regularly. It proceeds insidiously, too, so that, if you are inclined to try to ignore your own decline or delinquency, you may remain unaware of the self-neglect that has overtaken you. mandy, Von Kluge needs either to conglute up an army strong enough to stop the Allies at once or else to withdraw while his men still can get out.

A Withdrawal would carry the Germans back to the First Great War Somme line for a halt attempt to save the rocket emplacements of the Pas Calais.

But the second Allied cross-Seine spearhead to the area of Montereau-Sens, 35 miles south of Paris, opens positions for a new wave of encirclement which could create a Somme line stand as surely as the Mantes bridgehead cracked open Seventy Seine defence. This second spearhead now is pointed at the Marne battlefields of the First Great War.

The Battle of France has burst into the open, and the Germans seemingly have little hope now of anything but being caught on any stable line short of the German border.

The Germans' rocket bombing of London's twice-tried civilian population in the latest flying bomb attacks has been interpreted by many as final attempt of the force Gen. Eisenhower to risk new landings where the Germans wanted the Allies to land.

Even that last hope—if indeed it played a part in German strategy—now has been knocked out by the seizure bold stroke which has left the 15th army manning a defence line pointed the wrong way.

PRODUCTION PEAK

Production of aircraft is likely to reach an all-time peak in value in 1944-1945 with an increase of about 10 per cent over last year.

The activities of the Red Triangle Hostess Club, an organization the aim of which is to provide for the service personnel, hospitality, whole scene and entertaining recreation while away from home, got off to a good beginning last week under the capable leadership of Irene Walsh and her Orange Group. Monday night saw the dancing club which is growing very popular with the boys from the surrounding stations.

This project affords the means whereby they can learn this art under the direction and teaching of the girls of the club. Dancing is a good means of exercising both in itself and in schooling the youth to become better "misses." Another very popular form of entertainment enjoyed by the boys is the weekly bridge party on Tuesday evening which is always enthusiastically received by everyone. And, of course, one could never forget the mid-weekly dances in the auditorium of the Y.M.C.A. Despite the Kiwanis Carnival, the dance last week was reported there on Wednesday night. The party on that particular occasion was attended by a good percentage of air force men from Deseronto station.

The program at the "Y" on Thursday night will be no stereotype...that was hostesses' night off with Open House being the feature. On Friday the evening's Friday evening saw the music appreciation group in full swing with flying colors under the leadership of Mrs. Lortzing. It consisted of two hours of classical and semi classical record playing which is being very much appreciated by everyone to keep the building of their library of classical records ahead. The Belleville Armouries was the scene of the "Hostess Hop and bustle" on Saturday eve. for the weekly dance. There was a big attendance of civilians and service men. An elimination dance awarded the winners Miss Dorothy Lee and LAC. Deric Rook, of Mountain View, with prizes, and LAC. Rook was overly broad one which hailed Doreen Cunningham and LAC. Fred Claire of Stirling.

Sunday and a beautiful day with a picnic at Conniston Park was a fitting climax to a full week. Over eighty Hostesses were on the job that day, with not only the district ports being well represented, but also a liberal sprinkling from the "khaki clad" from Belleville and Kingston.

Beautiful, New Coiffures

Ann Miller has a distinctive and becoming hair-do.

By HELEN FOLLETT

Coiffures strive for simplicity and elegance. Their variety is beyond enumerating. Time was when women's hair all looked alike, hairdresses being standardized. Long faces, short ones, fat faces, lean ones carried the same arrangement.

When grandma was a young lady every head carried a load of demanding curls, ringlets and under-padding of fringes. Yes, and they got plenty, we hear tell. The first bobs were pretty much the same. Short, all haircdo now, we ask you! Flat tops, pompadours, Short hair, long hair. You reveal your forehead or you don't with bangs.

It is cunning little quirk of your own slips into the coiffure it is all to the good, make for the touch of personality that is all its own. Or, ter. We have heard that a single curl upon the forehead has been known to fascinate a suitor, lead him to the altar. Curious creatures, we asked a young man, the other day, what he noticed first about a girl when he met her. He answered "her hair. If it is smartly arranged and clean looking she passes. If it is blowsy I pass her by. I have a dislike for messy hair."

Of course, the young lady might have been lying, but certainly he reported did not point that fact out to him.

The older woman who has put her hand on hair growing, finds she has grown with the face she had for years, can arrange them in several ways. There is the up and down parting at the back, sometimes with a single curl, but the hair there swept forward toward the ears. On the right side a mass of tiny ringlets and curls.

BEAUTY By Helen Jameson

It's Off-Fashioned to be Pretty

Your good-looks reporter sat facing two women in a suburban train; couldn't help hearing what they said. They talked about their jobs in the munitions service, chatted cheerfully about this and that. The train stopped at a station, a girl in uniform got on, stopped to pass the time of day with one of my fellow passengers, then went on into the next coach.

"There is an example of a wonderful transformation in a young woman," remarked one accurate observance. "Two years ago she was about the most unattractive girl in our community. She apparently had no interests of any kind, had developed an inferiority complex, seldom attended social affairs, sat on the side lines when she did. Because of her defeatist attitude she made little effort to improve her appearance, thinking, I suppose, it wasn't worthwhile, as she was a 'wall flower,' anyway.

"The boys kept clear of her. She wasn't responsive; she seldom smiled; as a companion she had nothing to offer. Her mother was unhappy because her daughter wasn't enjoying a normal social life, like other girls.

"Well, my dear, the war awakened her. She started up with the CWAC. Such changes in looks, character and manners as took place you would never believe!

"She had always had a slouchy way of walking; now she pulls up her shoulders, holds her head high, has acquired vitality and grace; they show in the expression of her face, in her eyes, which are bright which she moves.

"Wearing a well-fitted uniform, she has found out that she has a fine figure. She went to a beauty shop, got a new style trim and hair-do that brought her up to date. In the shop, an operator persuaded her to change her makeup, which she switched for experts. Talk about your ugly duckling turning into a swan; here you have a demonstration.

"You should see her in our canteen dances; she's a good dancer, is still self-respect past the pretty-pretties and she's doing nothing by the way of war work. She gives them a nod and a smile. She has a date tonight.

"Of course, the secret is that she has found something worthwhile to do, and it has taken her mind off herself. She has real time for sympathy. She has made a useful place for herself in an unhappy world, and that gives her a feeling of happiness. Also she has developed beauty — real beauty — not just prettiness."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

ABOUT LOVE-LETTERS

To some girls who are in love, writing love-letters to the far-off soldier or sailor boy seems the natural means to marry is the thing they are happiest in doing.

It is a comfort to confide things to the person who understands them best. It's a joy to keep on trying to express the love that is the biggest emotion they've ever experienced, even if they never quite succeed in doing it. And they want to tell all the little things happenings that will interest the soldier boy and keep him linked with home.

But to other girls, to whom it's been a real test to express themselves on paper, love-letter writing isn't easy at all, sounds and seems one of these has confided to me the great embarrassment she is suffering on this very account.

Esther D. hasn't seen her fiance for two years and at the moment naturally doesn't know exactly what to do. Both boys have known each other since their school days. Bill is everything that he should be as a boy of a prospective husband, and it's now Esther's job to keep him long cheerful letters with the greatest frequency.

"I've hate letter-writing," she tells me. "I've always hated it. For the first few months it wasn't so hard to write to Bill. Now it's almost impossible, though I do make myself write every two weeks. You see I can't write a good letter. And things that are funny don't seem to me will interest him. I don't see how he can stand it up. What shall I do about it?"

As I've written her, there must be something in Esther's way of thinking. She is unwilling to give up established habits in the character of a poor letter-writer. She ought to take an hour's extra time in trying to make herself a good one. Not so much by study and practice, though that might help. But by using her imagination and trying to guess what Bill, whose life is so much harder than hers, would most like to hear about. He needs to know he's girl loves and admires him. She must tell him that, and she must show it. And even though the little things that are happening in the home town are trivial compared with what he is up against, he wants to know about them just the same. What she writes may not sound like a letter in a book, but that won't matter. He wants reality, and faithfulness, and assurance about the future.

What he'll probably doesn't understand is that Esther's love is of a quiet rather than a feverish type. And let us hope he may find in that under the strain of separation that love has become rather selfish. In any case, he deserves these letters. And she must produce them.

Ordnance of Kingston Wins First Game of O.A.S.A. Int. Playdowns From Sacos, 7-2

Winners Get Jump on Locals in Scoring Four Runs in First Frame

PLAY HERE WEDNESDAY

Making their hits count into runs in the Army Athletic Association of the Kingston Softball League, took the first game of a best-in-three Intermediate O.A.S.A. series from the RAOC "Marines" by a score of 7 to 3 at Kingston on Monday night. The second game of the series will be played at the Fair Grounds here on Wednesday evening when the local "Marines" must win to force a third and deciding issue.

The Ordnance "Soldiers" got the game's big jump in the initial frame when the homesters scored four runs, which proved to be two less as the "Marines" booted the spheroid around for three costly errors. Strangely enough both teams collected eight hits, but the "Gunners" capitalized on the Marines' errors and proved apt opportunists when it came to hitting in the clutches.

Jim Hunter, who hurled for the Marines, struck out the first batter to face him, but the Ordnance was safe on an error. The following batter hit to short and all hands were safe on the Marines' second consecutive miscue. Atanas, the Ordnance centre-fielder, then stepped to the plate to deliver a two-run-producing double and St. Pierre, the homesters' left fielder and big hitter of the night, followed with a home run that drove Atanas in ahead of him. Fielder and Atanas then giving the "Soldiers" four runs, two of the unearned nature. Pershing's third inning single was the only other hit the winners delivered until the sixth, when the homesters scored two more runs. Jones opened with Fanning being safe on an error, Atanas followed with a double to score Jones and Fanning with a double to score two making his runs-batted-in column read four. St. Pierre batted in another with a double in the eighth after Atanas had previously banged out a two-base blow to end the homesters' scoring.

First Local Hit In Fourth.

The first resemblance of a Belleville hit off Holowchuc, the Ordnance pitcher, came in the fourth with Jim Barrigo singling without scoring. Barrigo also singled to open the seventh, but was forced at second by Phil Lott for the game's only double play. Murney Green followed with a triple, but left stranded. Hits by Casey, who replaced Callaghan at first in the sixth, and Jack Armstrong gave the Marines their first run in the eighth, while a fielder's choice and hits by Green and Whitehead added the final Marine counter in the ninth. The Marines collected seven of their eight hits from the seventh inning on during which time Max Peoples' SACO's dominated the play, but the Soldiers' lead was too great to be hauled down.

Hunter struck out six Kingston batters, retiring the side via the strikeout route in the third inning. Holowchuc only whiffed two Belleville batters, but his support was stronger than Hunter's. One of the features of the game was the fact neither pitcher gave up a single pass on balls throughout.

St. Pierre Leads Hitters.

St. Pierre, the Soldiers' left-fielder, led the batters with the game's only circuit blow and added two doubles to his list of the winners' seven runs. Atanas followed with two doubles and a single. Jim Barrigo with three singles and Murney Green with a triple and a single paced the Marines' attack. The strong Kingston Ordnance team will be seen here Wednesday evening in the second game of the first round of the Intermediate "A" series in the O.A.S.A. playdowns.

The lineups:

DON GUTTERIDGE HITS HOMER THAT WINS FOR BROWNS

Victory Gives St. Louis a 4½-Game Lead Over the Yanks

YANKS KEEP PACE

By JACK HAND
Associated Press Sport Writer

Mr. Pepper Pot of the St. Louis Browns, alias Don Gutteridge, won't be in the front row when they count the most valuable player ballots in November but he was the No. 1 man on the ticket today in St. Louis.

The little second baseman walted until last night at Washington to get his annual home run and pick-ed the right spot—in the 12th inning of a 3-3 ball game with Frank Mancuso on base. Gutteridge hit one homer last year and one the year before.

When the ex-Cardinal gave the league-leaders a 4-3 victory over the Nats' Mickey Haefner, he gave them a shot in the arm that may shake them out of their troubles. Luke Sewell's men had dropped four in a row.

The 5-3 overtime win the: Sig Jakucki earned over Washington boosted the Browns' lead to 4 1/2 games as Boston fell before Cleveland 7-6, in 15 innings because of another home run, hit by Mickey Rocco of the Indians.

Detroit, next spot of call for St. Louis after they finish their Washington stand, was also dropped by New York, 5-3, as Walt Dubiel stacked up his effectively for his ninth win.

Philadelphia took a 2-3 decision over Chicago in two innings with Don Black getting the verdict over Bill Dietrich on Frankie Hayes' bases-loaded single.

Pittsburgh's latest win streak stretched to five and 16 of their last 17 as they trimmed Brooklyn, 7-4 in 10 innings after finishing up a suspended game hanging over from July 9 with a 9-7 triumph.

Cincinnati bombed Boston, 10-1, as Johnny Vander Meer, 146, Bert Lanier, 162, Philadelphia, drew (10).

Never satisfied with his ring toe John Katan, the Palermo Panther, returned to the Arena Wednesday night to again meet Earl McCready, powerful Aurora farmer, in a 90 minute time affair. Now it seems Katan and McCready have wrestled against each other so often they should go together like ham and eggs, and this is not the case. Whenever these two ancient ring enemies clash action aplenty can be assured the wrestling patrons of the night as there is nothing Katan delights in more than beating his ancient rasslin' enemy, the popular Earl McCready.

For good measure Promoter Frank Tunney has Nanjo Singh, the mad Hindu, meeting Jos. Kotch in the opener while in between the curtain-raiser and the main bout Dr. Len Hall tangles with "Irish Tom" Collins of Buffalo.

RELIANCE GIRLS WIN BY DEFAULT IN FIRST GAME

Combines Fail to Field Team for Game in Playdowns

EXHIBITION TILT

Reliance girls won the first game of the Belleville Ladies' Softball League playdowns by default when the local Combines failed to field a team as the Armouries met on Monday night. With a best-in-three series to decide the issue the Reliance lass one in the proverbial bag with two to go. The series continues on Thursday night.

In order to give the patrons some sport action competition, however, Coach Tilly Donihee loaned the Combines three players and Reliance beat the Combines 21 to 5 in an exhibition match. Mille Hamilton hurled for the Reliance while Flo Delorme pitched for the Combines. Mille let the boers down with five hits, which included a home run by E. Archer and a double by E. Allen.

For Reliance Buker, McKenna, Golden, Foster and Elliott hit doubles while Kay Coathup banged out a triple. Reliance scored runs in every appearance at bat except their last. Pee Wee Golden, with four for four, paced the winners on the attack, while Millie Foster helped her own cause with two singles.

With Reliance playing the Combines a second game in their best-in-three series on Thursday Secretary Eddie Schieder announced today the Mountain View-Universal meeting would be delayed one day to be played Friday evening.

SERVICE SPORTS EXTENDED IN NEW DEFENCE ORDER

Servicemen Can Play With Civilians but Cannot Enter Playoffs

JANUARY BAN LIFTED

OTTAWA, Aug. 23 —(CP)— An armed forces sports order issued today permits servicemen to play on service teams in amateur leagues, that include civilian teams but prohibits them playing on civilian teams or in games including group, provincial or Dominion championships.

Army and air force officers and enlisted men cannot compete in other than authorized public shows.

In other words, Opl. Johnny Canuck can play for a service team in the Ottawa City League against civilians, but he mustn't play for one of the civilian entries and he can play only until his team reaches the play-offs when he and his team must drop out. Johnny, who is restricted "except in special cases" to playing within the boundaries of Ottawa, remains eligible.

No service official would be quoted, but it was learned reliably that if service teams entered the Quebec Senior Hockey League this season, they would be considered as "special cases." One service official said it would be up to district commanding officers to administer any ban that might exist to meet the needs of their own areas.

The order lifts a January ban which restricted service teams to playing in "amateur leagues of local garrison leagues only and which dealt a severe blow to much of Canada's organized amateur sport—especially hockey.

The order emphasized that permission for sports participation may not be given only where such activities do not interfere with other phases of training.

Here is the official service summary in part or the points in the order:

"1. Every possible encouragement to be given to sports participation by all ranks within the services, already approved by sports councils at Dominion Headquarters.

"2. Garrison leagues may be established for service personnel as well as non-professional leagues which include civilian teams, on approval of the officer commanding or district officer.

"3. Individual service personnel may only play with or against a civilian team for practice purposes, for exercise, by permission of the commanding officer. They may not play in unrelated leagues or exhibition games as players on teams which have civilian players.

"4. Teams may not play in exhibition games for the benefit of funds or their areas of command, except in special cases with full participation permitted to Defence Headquarters.

"5. Teams from all services may enter leagues with civilian teams, not professional, by permission of the commanding officer, but may not take part in any games leading to group, provincial or Dominion championships.

"6. Participation by army and air force personnel in public boxing or wrestling performances, other than those organized by the services is forbidden."

READY FOR TRAP SHOOT

Vandalia, O., Aug. 22—(AP)—This little Ohio town of some 500 population—best known for the permanent home of the Amateur Trapshooting Association—was ready today for its annual big moment, the 45th renewal of the Grand American Trapshooting Tournament.

For the next three days upwards of 900 of North America's most expert marksmen will blast away at 500 clay targets each.

This is the second straight year the grand has been conducted on a "one-day and bring-your-own-shells basis.

Wonderful Stuff

A man entered a barber's shop for a haircut. The barber remarked that his client's hair was getting thin on top.

"Why not try a little of my wonderful hair restorer?" he urged. It's only a shilling."

The customer bought a bottle. A week later he returned to the shop.

"Well," asked the barber, "how did you find the hair restorer?"

"I left the bottle on the kitchen table, and my wife, thinking it was a new kind of furniture polish, started to use it," he said. "How much do you charge to shave a sideboard?"

Errors Hurt

Showing signs of stage fright in the initial frame, the SACO "Marines" booted the ball around for three costly errors in Kingston last night, which gave the Ordnance Army Hunter and company dropped the first game of their Intermediate O. A. S. A. playdowns to the Kingston Ordnance to the tune of 7 to 3.

The Kingston soldiers made the best of the Marines' miscues to score four runs in the opening inning while registering but two safe blows. However, those two blows were healthy ones, a double and a home run, which would have been good for two runs regardless.

Had the local not became jittery and placed Hunter in a tough spot with three bobbles in this frame the issue might have ended differently. At any rate the Marines have the opportunity to gain revenge by winning on the home ice here Wednesday and forcing the issue into a third and deciding game.

Outfielders Hit.

Each team collected the same number of base hits—eight each. However, it was the Soldiers' outar gardners who did the most damage to Pitcher Jim Hunter's deliveries, the trio of Ordnance outfielders counting seven of their eight bingles. Atanas, their centre fielder, paced the pill for two doubles and a single to score three runs and bat in two others. St. Pierre, their left fielder, was the big sweatsmith for the winners with a two-run producing homer in the first and two doubles. St. Pierre scored another run in the fifth, as he and Atanas batted in all of the winners' seven runs. Jones opened in right, got a single and Fanning, the Soldiers' short stop, counted on Atanas' two-bagger. Jim Barrage, the Marines steady left fielder, helped himself to three sin-gles, while Murney Green had a single and a triple, but failed to score a run.

On the Beak.

Something of a softball record was established at Kingston last night when umpire Townsend called a single walk in the 17 half innings the Jimmy Jim Hunter was also the Marines' mound and struck out six Kingston batters, while a five-hit artist named Holowchuc hurled for the Kingston champions and whiffed two. However, the difference came in the heavy extra base clubbing of St. Pierre and Atanas, the Marines failed to reverse matters in the return match tomorrow when First Baseman Callaghan was due return to the local line-up.

Get a Free One.

The Reliance gals got a free one when Umpire Jordan in their playdown in the Ladies Softball League at Kingston last night, as the latter had to default the game owing to the lack of playing material, as the Kingston team had played for the benefit of the fans with Reliance providing playing strength for the completed Combine ranks. After the game Secretary Eddie Schieder announced the second game in this series would be played Thursday night at Mountain View and Thursday evening Friday evening at the Armouries.

Record in Wheels.

John Cobb, of England, covered a measured mile at 368.85 miles per hour in his 4,000 horsepower Napier-Railton automobile, faster than man had ever travelled in wheels before, at the Bonneville, Utah, salt flats five years ago today. He failed to get a new world land speed record, motor trouble preventing the return run demanded by racing rules.

They Meet Again.

Perhaps no two wrestlers in Promoter Frank Tunney's grappling history have met more often than Earl McCready and John "Fingers" Katan, who tangle his show here Wednesday night. One thing is certain "Big Earl" and the Palermo Panther always can be depended to give the muscle-bending patrons a fast action and a better variety of holds than any two in the business and it makes little difference whether they are battling it out before a thousand at the Home Arena or ten times that number at Maple Leaf Gardens, the fans always shout the decision. That's why they are popular drawing material regardless of where they play ring wars.

South was declarer at a six diamond contract. The opening lead from west was the spade king. And when dummy hand shows up, there may be a losey in spades and in hearts.

Of course, a heart finesse may be taken. If it wins, there is nothing else to worry about. But a good player never takes that 50-50 chance if there is any safer play to try first.

Where there is a finesse, there may be a sorty-and-cutplay to work on. So, south won the first spade, two trumps, and four clubs. He then led the spade ten, which west won with the queen.

Declarer's hands are now stripped of spades and clubs; opponents of trumps. If west had led a spade, declarer gets rid of a heart with a stuff-and-ruff. A heart return is into the arms of the ace-queen.

East had a fit. He pointed out that west should have banked the second spade. East could have won with the jack to return a heart and kill the glam bid.

West's alibi was that he was afraid south had the spade Jack, too: That the ten was led to fool him. But that did not pay the loan.

A slam pays more than 900 points. An extra trick at diamonds is only 30 more. If there is a chance to save the slam, it certainly is worth gambling the loss of an additional 20 points. When the second spade was led, west should have considered the danger of being endplayed.

That sounds not when coldly studying all the cards. In the heat of a bridge battle, it may not add up so easily.

One of the screen's most popular negro comedians is Mantan Moreland, now at the Capitol theatre in "Charlie Chan in the Secret Service", the Monogram detective drama which sees Sidney Toler in his familiar characterization of the Chinese sleuth.

Before his entry into motion pictures, Moreland was a favorite song and dance man of the New York stage, having appeared in many such musical comedies as "Blackbirds of 1928", "Singing the Blues", "Dixieville Follies", and made his screen debut five years ago, when he was Hollywood bound to play an important role with champion Joe Louis in the all-negro picture, "Spirit or Youth", and thus began a career as a featured player in the Secret Service", and others staged a slugfest with the Wings blasting their way to a 9-7 decision. HEAT OF RACE TELLS ON ORIOLES

By the Associated Press

The heat of the International League pennant race seems to have had a telling effect on the Baltimore Orioles.

The Birds had an even game going into the last of the ninth last night against Syracuse but blew up in that frame and the Chiefs came out on top, 7-6. Jim Vatcher, who had relieved Bobo Palica in the eighth, walked Dutch Meie to start the ninth. Then Vatcher threw the ball into centre field trying to break up an attempted sacrifice.

The flock really came apart at the seams when third baseman Frank Skaff threw wild past second to permit Meie to take third with the clinched. The Orioles, now two games behind Newark, surrendered the lead Sunday.

The Orioles were forced to make their two runs without the aid of hits as Bob Malloy chalked up his 11th victory.

In the only other action in the league, Buffalo and Rochester battled to a slugfest with the Wings blasting their way to a 9-7 decision. In all there were 36 hits made, 16 of them Buffalos'.

Finally they toed out the umpire. They put in another umpire (tell Durocher to try it some time) and this new ump was one of our leading players who had come out of the hospital. Well, things worked fine until the end of the 10th when with the score tied our team, realizing the hitting ability of the kid we had umpiring, tried to take him out as ump and use him as a pinch-hitter. But the Q.M. boys protested so strongly they finally walked off the field and the game has to be played over."

"Up In Arms"

Not by halves, but by quarters will you see "Up In Arms".

This spectacular technicolor musicomedy produced by Samuel Goldwyn for RKO Radio release, is now on the Bells Theatre screen —and there can be no doubt but that it is the most entertaining picture in years.

Crammed full of laughter and music, of clever novelty features and brilliant performances and spectacular scenes the film tops anything of its kind Goldwyn has ever turned out, and it guarantees a delightful afternoon or evening for any thatsregard.

Danny Kaye, long noted on the screen for his adroit and versatile comedy, makes his screen debut in the stellar role, and in any that he is sensational is putting it mildly. He is a one-man show in himself, and his portrayal of the neurotic draftee plagued with a flock of non-existent ailments is one of the funniest characterizations ever filmed.

With the fine support of a happily-chosen cast headed by Dinah Shore, Dana Andrews and Constance Dowling, Kaye keeps things moving at a zing speed and his antics and adventures in cami, aboard a transport and on a slap-infested South Pacific Island, make the production something long to remember.

Five notable song numbers, one a rousing soldiers' chorus, the other four sung separately or together by Kaye and Miss Shore, and the gorgeous color ballet, add to the attractiveness of the offering. So

Wisnok of Hamilton Cards 76 in Tam O'Shanter Tourney

(By The Canadian Press)

N. K. Wisnock of Hamilton, Ont., was the one Canadian who drew mention in the field of 250 amateurs who yesterday swarmed the course at Chicago for the qualifying round of the seven-day Tam O'Shanter All-American Golfing Circus, Wisnock carded a 76, four over par, but whether he earned his way into 72-hole medal play will not be known until the balance of the three-ponter contingent swings its way around the battlegrinding today. The pros, numbering 213, go into action Wednesday for the top prize of more than $13,000 in war bonds after 48 female contenders go through their qualifier today.

In minor O.H.A. playdowns at Hamilton last night, the Red Box midget nine took Kitchener into camp 8-3 in the fire encounter of their regional series. Hamilton Thurscos, however, fell before Toronto Edwards 3-1 in the first of their juvenile playdowns.

He was found to have a fractured skull and dislocated neck.

A see-saw game at Port Colborne last night resulted in an 8-6 victory by Welland Atlas over Port Colborne-Welland Victoria, for the second straight decision of the Steelmen in their Niagara senior baseball semi-finals. The victors were guilty or six errors.

Camp No. 30 C.I.B.T.C. with Norm Burtch hurling, defeated the Guelph Adams Dairy 11-0 at Brantford last night to even the series in the Ontario Amateur Softball Association Intermediate A series. The teams battled to a 6-6 tie here Friday and Guelph won in Guelph 8-4. The teams will play the third and deciding game today.

Herman Friess, 13-year-old grandson of 70-year-old Herman Friess, long over the reins to Count James L. Worthy in the 2:34 pace at the Blue Lake, Wis., fair yesterday after the veteran horseman suffered injuries, the youngster sent the bay gelding to victory in three straight heats.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By STU THOMAS

Toronto, Aug. 22 —(CP)—Taking note of the much-muddled situation on the senior Canadian football front, Mike Rodden of the Kingston Whig-Standard suggests that Kingston should get into the swim this year. With Toronto Argonauts the service league, the O.R.F.U. might be able to use the Kingston-lite as a fifth cog for the loop.

Some classy footballers sojourning at Kingston are outlined by Mike as: Ken Preston, Reginald Rikers backfielder; Vip Bradley, former Queen's Rough Rider; Bob Elliott of Queen's University squads, who enjoys some little reputation as a coach.

Many of a rare element from Kingston would do much to rejuvenate the groppy football world in grand style, interested. Always provided or course, the other cities would accept a new rival.

Chin Talk:

Detroit Red Wings talent scout Freddie Cox says the three Chinese Chin boys from Lucknow, Ont., are going to surprise everyone this winter. Cox says the three—George, Albert and Willies, 15, 14, and 17 respectively—have much more than mere box-office appeal. They'll be seasoned at Oshi or Woodstock a winter or two, but Cox is confident they'll be ready for the big-time before too long.

Incidentally:

The storm is over for a time in the West-Coast lacrosse loop, but wait until play-off time rolls around. Nobody knows whether any of the service teams will be allowed to leave the province if they win the league, but the Alberta civilian teams want to travel East. So it looks as though it might turn into another of those double play-off fixtures, with everybody groggy in the finish. . . . All that we've found the unassuming soul who started the story, Wm. Hewitt that Harry Taylor, smooth centre for the Montreal Junior Canadiens, James Canadians last winter, has turned down an offer to join the Montreal Royals. Canadiens, Generals . . . BOBBY DOERR BATTING LEADER

New York Aug. 23—(AP)—Bobby Doerr of Boston held tight to the American League batting lead today despite a few hitless efforts but Lou Boudreau of Cleveland but Stan Musial of Saint Louis passed the sliding Dixie Walker of Brooklyn in the nation's red hot chase.

According to averages through Sunday's games, Doerr was hitting .324 and edged Boudreau by a percentage on Boudreau who achieved three hits in second, passing Dick Siebert of Philadelphia and Pete Fox of Boston.

Milt Byrnes of St. Louis grabbed seventh place among the American's top 10 and Stan Spence of Washington took ninth with Wally Moses of Chicago and Vern Stephens of St. Louis dropping out of the select circle.

Musial and Walker by one point at .355 but the Brooklyn favorite returned to the lineup on a full-time basis Tuesday after 15 days of pinch hitting chores due to an ankle injury. Johnny Hopp of St. Louis at .346 and Joe Medwick of New York at .344 stepped into the title picture with healthy gains.

GIRL FROM LISBON

By Rob Eden

CHAPTER 12

With a start she noticed a large ring on the third finger of Lucia's right hand. It was the exact duplicate of the one that had been given to her in Lisbon.

"You DO have a ring like mine after all," she said, a feeling of anger sweeping over her.

"Of course. You were right all the time. But you should I admit anything when you were so stupid as to make a scene right in front of people who weren't concerned?"

"You could have solved the whole business in Mr. Levering's office, then, and you deliberately didn't."

"Of course not. Do think I'm a fool?"

"You were willing for me to take all the blame, though."

"Why not? You weren't over really one of us. Douglas Clyde told me that from the start."

"Oh, so you admit then, that you are mixed up with Clyde in this business?"

"I don't see what harm it will do now. You'll never tell anyone about it."

There was a finality in the girl's voice that sent cold shivers racing over Jeanne.

"You—you're taking me to Clyde now?"

"You're getting bright at last, aren't you?" Lucia laughed hushily.

"Don't you know you can't get away with it?"

"What do you know what we can do and what we can't? We have a powerful organization. If you think a pop-in-jay like this Leverine is going to upset our plans, you're even more foolish than I thought."

"You're a citizen — you were born in this country. Haven't you one speck of patriotism in your makeup?" Jeanne demanded.

"I'm a greater patriot than you ever dreamed of being. Dr. Clyde and I and the people with us are going to save this country from ruin. I suppose you believe all the tripe Mr. Roosevelt hands out about the four freedoms for all and that sort of stuff."

"It's all rot I tell you. We know what should be done and we're going to do it. America will come out of this intact—we'll save millions of lives."

Jeanne caught a wild gleam in Lucia's eyes. Her insistence and her fear had entirely vanished. She was excited. Her face was flushed. She gestured often with her right hand, keeping only her left on the wheel of the Packard car.

"She's crazy," Jeanne told herself. "Stark raving mad. She and Clyde both."

The car was on the high river road now, soon Jeanne knew it would come to the sharp turn where the road twisted like a hairpin and almost reversed itself, veering away from the edge of a cliff, and skirting the river.

After they crossed the valley, they would start to climb again and then they would come to Ward Park. She wondered if Max had Leverine were following their car or whether they had gone ahead.

She glanced at the speedometer and saw they were traveling entirely too fast to make the sharp turn.

"Lucia!" she shouted. "Slow down!"

The other girl, apparently driving by instinct, busy with her thoughts, took her foot off the accelerator. Jeanne was relieved, and the car was skidding and plunging, Lucia had grabbed the wheel and pulled with all her strength.

Between them the two girls brought the car to a bumping stop on the very edge of the cliff. A few feet more and they would have crashed a hundred feet down the almost sheer bank into the river.

"What happened?" Lucia demanded.

"Max have blown out a tire from the way the car acted," Jeanne said, trying to get her breath.

There was a shriek of tires being braked sharply on the road three men piled out of it and ran toward them.

"Are you all right, Jeanne? Are you hurt, darling?"

Max was opening the door and helping the girl out. Lucia started to bolt out the other door and found herself firmly seized in Leverine's arms.

The third man had run toward the cliff. He stopped suddenly, shouted, whipped a gun from his pocket and fired at something below him. Then he plunged recklessly over the edge, sliding and falling down the steep bank.

At the bottom, a man took deliberate aim at his pursuer, his bullet kicking up the dust beside him. The fugitive attempted to fire again and again, but apparently his gun jammed. With a curse he flung the weapon into the water and plunged in after it.

Leverine who had quickly handcuffed Lucia to the car, commanded Jeanne Daniels, who was aiming his gun at the bobbing head of the man, now well away from the shore swimming furiously toward the other side.

"Don't shoot!" he ordered sharply.

"But, chief—he's getting away!"

"That's all right — we'll get him eventually. He won't get far." He stood looking at the man in the water. He floundered now, gasping, throwing his arms wildly about and shouting unintelligibly.

"He's drowning!" Leverine exclaimed. He quickly stripped off his coat and then knelt and unlaced his shoes before entering the water.

"Don't do that, Chief," his companion begged. "Hes not worth it."

"Got to save him if I can," Leverine shouted, and started swimming with powerful strokes toward the struggling man.

But long before he could reach him, the figure in the water had disappeared. Leverine swam vainly about the spot for some time diving until he was exhausted.

"Dead," he gasped, as he came back to the rocky beach.

"And good riddance," Daniels said.

Max was on the shore now, and helped Leverine back up the hill. "Where's Lucia — the F. B. I. chief asked.

Jeanne's watching her with the gun you gave her. She won't get away, never fear."

And that was how they found the girls when they reached the top. Lucia, her hands fastened securely to the steering wheel, was slumped slightly in the corner of the seat. Jeanne was standing on the running board, the gun in one hand at her side.

"Good young woman, what have you got to say for yourself," Leverine demanded, as he faced them.

"Nazi-lies!"

"The old pre-Nazi line of a certain brand of so-called patriots," Leverine commented. "Anything else?"

"Oh, yes, she did intimate very strongly that I was going on a one way ride. That Dr. Clyde would see that I never interfered with their plans again when he got his hands on me."

"Quite so darling." Max said, his arms going protectively about the shoulders.

"Well, you wont have to worry about that any more," Daniels commented.

"What do you mean?" Lucia asked bolt upright in the car, her eyes staring wildly.

"His name, my dear, that Dr. Clyde is dead," Levering said.

"Dead!" Lucia screamed. "You devils! You killed him!"

"Miss Ward," the officer said, quietly. "He was drowned Jack, here, chased him down the river. He fired one shot at him and missed. Clyde fired at Jack and then his gun jammed. He jumped in the water and tried to swim the river and went down. He was gone before I could get to him."

"You killed him!" You killed the man I love!"

"I thought you might have loved him," he shrugged "but apparently the good doctor didn't sincerely reciprocate."

"You lie! He adored me!"

Max looked at her in astonishment.

"Don't you know what happened, Lucia?" he asked softly.

"All I know is that Douglas is dead! She suddenly burst into tears, and Jeanne, in spite of what had happened, felt sorry for her.

"What did happen?" she asked.

"Apparently, from what you say Clyde commissioned Miss Ward to bring you to her place where he planned to dispose of you in some way.

"But he must have decided he could dispense with Miss Ward, too, for he hid out in the bushes beside the road and when the car came along, shot a hole in the rear tire, just as you reached the sharp turn. How you kept from going over, I don't know."

"He never meant to kill both of us?" Jeanne asked.

"He didn't mean anything else. There was no way Douglas Clyde could have escaped from the cliff, and that's where he would be sent him plunged over the cliff, and that's why he didn't want to see him jump out in the road just as we came rushing up behind. And after I had shot at him while Jack went after Clyde. He saw he was trapped, and tried to escape. He knew what happened."

"So he knew, that, Lucia's Jeanne demanded. "Your great wonderful Dr. Clyde who was going to save America from itself, tried to kill not only me but you, too!"

"I won't believe it," she sobbed. "It's all lies — lies you made up to torture me."

But in the end she did believe them, and when she did she broke down and confessed everything she knew. Lucia's confession matched pretty well with what Leverine had suspected.

Clyde had been the head of a small group none of allen birth who had in with his propaganda that Germany was unbeatable — that the best way out for America was to compromise and accept the fact that Hitler was to be the supreme ruler of Europe and that we should co-operate with him.

Lucia had fallen in love with the professor first, and then had been easily swayed by his way of thinking. After aunt a staunch patriot, knew nothing about the plot and was shocked when she heard the truth that she suffered a stroke.

Clyde, it was learned, had studied in Germany when the Nazis were first coming into power and had been converted to their doctrine then. Whether from conviction or from ambition to become one of the leaders in America, no one knew. It was certain, though, that he was ambitious and he really had plotted to depose Norwood in disgrace from the College and slide into his place.

Fewer With Money.

With the vast Hallard fortune at his control, there was no limit, he felt, to the power he could wield.

Kay had been his dupe as well as Lucia, although he had more than a little Nazi sympathies and had always his own interests at heart. He had written about his plan to gain control of the college and ultimately co-operated with him in placing letters in Dr. Norwood's file, had pretended, she said, to marry her when he became the head of Hallard College.

Miss Ward's investigation of Clyde's activities, revealed the fact that he had caused the downfall of the nearby airfield.

A psychiatrist of national standing, his examinations of candidates for the air forces were accepted without question. Undoubtedly he had rejected many very fine candidates as emotionally unsound, although there was no way of checking on the exact number.

It was known, however, that he had "washed out" a number of men later proved to be entirely unfitted for the strenuous life of flying, and several disastrous accidents were traced back to his decisions.

Apparently, fearing an investigation, he had dropped out of his air field duties for several months on the plea that his own health didn't permit the added work.

Because there was no definite proof that Lucia had purposely done any damage to the war effort, Leverine, without dragging the Hallard family itself into it."

Counter agents abroad were investigating to see whether the real Jeanne Hallard was dead. This, though, would take a long time.

Kay Roberts was not prosecuted, because no obvious proof existed when he learned of Clyde's espionage activities was sufficient proof that she had no part in his Nazi-inspired plot.

"I think Kay was carried away by her infatuation for Dr. Clyde," Miss Marston told Norwood when they discussed what was to be done with her. "I can understand a girl being swayed in that way, even though I am a spinster."

"You're a very remarkable woman, Miss Marston," Norwood said, with a smile. "What do you recommend?"

"I've talked with Kay quite a lot since this happened. I don't think she'll ever make another misstep so long as she lives. At bottom, the child is very patriotic and she was terribly upset when she learned that she'd been the helpless of an enemy agent. She wants to make it up by serving this country in any way she can."

"What does she want today?"

"She doesn't want a soft job for her country in say way she can." wants to do something to be a nurse, and if the war is still going on when she graduates she wants to go to the front to help our boys who may be sick or wounded."

"What do you think? I'll leave it entirely up to you, knowing you as I do."

"I think she'll make a very excellent nurse. She is very sympathetic. I've written a letter to a superintendent of nurses I know at a Chicago hospital. All it needs is your signature, Dr. Norwood."

He read the letter, nodded his head in approval, and signed his name at the bottom.

"Thank you, Doctor. I know you'll never regret it," she said.

When Leverine had finished with her, Jeanne said goodbye to Miss Marston and Dr. Norwood and others of the faculty whom she had come to know, and quietly went out of Shelton.

From a Chicago hotel room she telephoned Lucia in Minneola.

There was a tap on her door and Max walked in. He kissed her still talking. The girl insisted on introducing him over the long distance wire.

"Who did you say he was?" the woman's voice asked, after she had taken the receiver, answered:

"Mr. Bennett, Captain Bennett," he said. "You'd better memorize that last name, Aunt Celia, because you're going to hear it a lot from now on."

"What do you mean, young man?"

"Simply this—your niece, Jeanne or Vera or whatever her name is and I are going to be married this afternoon and we're starting for California on the night train."

He hung up the receiver and turned to the girl with a wide grin.

"You shouldn't kid poor aunty that way," she protested.

"Who said I was kidding? Powder your nose and grab your hat —we're headed for the City Hall and the marriage license bureau."

"Oh, Max!" she rushed into his arms.

"What IS this California business?" she demanded.

"I've got my travel orders, and 10 days to get to the Pacific Coast air base. It's not much time for a honeymoon, but this is wartime, you know."

The End.

N. S. Airman Finds His Number on Shell

With the R.C.A.F. in France, Aug. 22. (CP Cable)—Sergeant, and at last—a man got a shell which actually had my number on it.
The man who proved the legend true was Leading Aircraftsman Clarence Mcmillan of Tatamagouche, N.S., batman in an R.C.A.F. Typhoon wing.
A piece of jagged shell casing the size of a silver dollar landed in a dug-out beside him recently. Leadingaircraftsman McMillan picked up the jagged piece of metal, looked at it observed it bore—"20700".
His eyes grew wide open".

Despite the fact that the members had not recovered from the enthusiasm of the recent carnival, the Kiwanis Club at its weekly luncheon in the Bonnie Hotel on Monday evening, gave a hearty welcome to Jack Linklater, District Governor on his official visit to the club. He congratulated the club on its many projects and especially the Kiwanis Queen Clinic and the other manifestations of service to the community. "I know why the public patronized your carnival heartily because you are doing a useful service in the community," said the speaker. "Kiwanis is the only club I speaker said this was the fifth and possibly the decisive year of the struggle and yet there were many who did not know what we are fighting for. The allies have been materialistic aims, no territorial aims and British are not fighting for commercial gains but all are fighting for the right of freedom, the right of religion and the right of trial. He stated that the Kiwanis Clubs have met the challenge of war in the relief field and those who could not serve

Tall Stories, Fish and Otherwise, Feature Rotary Club Luncheon

Shedding of summer vacations made the weekly luncheon of the Belleville Rotary Club, and many interesting stories were told by members asked to contribute to the after-luncheon program.

For instance there was Rotarian Mac McEwen, whose Munchausen-like proclivities were first brought to light when he related some big tales of shooting thirteen partridges with one shot and other stories.

Reluctant Mac, told with solemn solemn, of the yarn that went to be caught in a lake known only to himself and a select coterie of friends. Bag of pachyderms! proportions entreated the fishermen to throw them behind locks. Pinkston, [illegible] threshed supernatural[illegible] to work the hoax. Twice, the fishermen were forced to throw the unload the catch. Finally, fed up with the big fellows, the party left merrily—sat in the boat, assisting each other to haul in the fish, and gaily throwing them back to their native elements.

Yale One is Tyne.

Rotarian Neil Howard, however, had a fish story to tell. It seems, the honorable doctor spent a week's vacation at Westwood Lake. He caught, he said, the stormiest, coldest week in July, and contented himself with cutting, splitting and burning 1¼ cords of wood.

Game vacation end. After a wearisome paddle to the landing the party wended their way to the Howard automobile. A front tire was flat. This fixed, the car refused to start. Trouble in the carburetor was suspected and the little party dragged homeward on the return journey. Miles in the bush, the car, not to be outdone, refused to continue and quietly lay down and died.

The party tramped to a forest ranger tower. High above in his lookout was a ranger who, but they managed to get him to phone for help, the party sat down. The flies. Millions of wasps, hornets, mosquitoes, coming fresh meat for supper, attacked the little party in swarms. Finally a native arrived. He distrustfully the motor, examined it, left three parts over, said he didn't know what was wrong, and charged twelve dollars for his work.

Again the forest lower phone sent out the Howard S.O.S. Along came another woodsman mechanic. He looked over the sick patient, took its temperature, felt its pulse, put back the three parts, and mumbled "Two bucks, please." Rigor mortis was beginning to set in by this time. Rotarian in the mechanical corps, Dr. Howard, fighting his way through hordes of voracious insects, assembled the far-flung remains of his motor and roused another S.O.S. to Bannockburn for a tow truck.

This arrived and then began a ride that made the famous one of Paul Revere look like a hobby-horse on a merry-go-round. Sealed in the rear end of the tow truck, the honorable Rotarian was shaken out of his abode. Arriving at Bannockburn, a garage mechanic discovered the illness of the Howard car. A tiny spring costing twenty cents, had broken in the carburetor. Another thirty cents covered the entire cost.

Three Pound Bass Just Small Fry.

Then up spake brave Rotarian Gilbert, he of Morrie, N.Y., who opened his attenuating lips to clear waters of Salmon Lake in search of the elusive bass. "Three-and-one-half pound bass" he snorted, "are nothing here. Why, I am," he added, as he said, that "the fine Canadian people attract me when I come East," came to Canada, and I have been coming ever since and that was years ago." The trout in Salmon Lake, he said, after relating an amateur experience in New York State, "not only take your bait but stand up out of the water after they're hooked."

A Salmon Lake cottager (Dr. C. H. Green) hooked a trout one day last week, related Rotarian Gilbert, that weighed about 3½ pounds. The line seemed to drag very heavily and the excited cottager had visions of landing the largest trout ever seen in the vicinity. Finally the fish broke water, and to his amazement remained with its head sticking straight up in the air, about two-thirds of its length out of the surface. Attached to its tail, and coiled about part of its body was approximately two hundred feet of cotton line, lost by an unfortunate fisherman.

Rotarian Dr. Myers related his experiences in Haliburton County, while Howard Charters fish contribution to the story-telling orgy lost no color in the telling.

Rotarian Bert Conroy told of a dashing sailing escapade years ago up the Trent Canal, and the meeting was over.

President Pinkston urged the clubmen to get behind the Rotary Carnival being held all this week, and appealed for assistance in selling tickets on the Rotary $25 baby doll.

Spirit of Co-Operation Impresses Forrestal

Somewhere in France, Aug. 22—(AP)—James Forrestal, Secretary of the United states Navy, returned from a conference with Gen. Eisenhower Monday "tremendously impressed with the spirit of co-operation which he said the Allied Supreme Commander has fostered among the British and Americans and their Allies.

"What he has done in the way of resolution between us and the British—and all our Allies—is a great example for the rest of the world," Mr. Forrestal told a brief news conference.

The Secretary said:

"The confidence of both sides in his fairness has been maintained because he pursues one idea: the winning of the war. Everything else is secondary. It is a pattern of cooperation which could well be continued after the war . . .

The Secretary said the pressure is on in the Pacific and that the trend in that theatre was comparable to that in Europe.

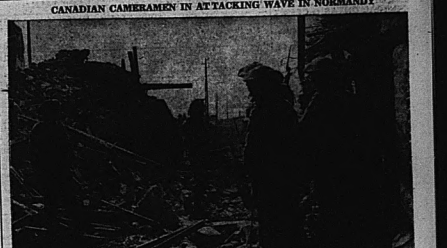
Eden Confers With Allied Field Commanders

With the Allied Forces in France, Aug. 22 —(CP Cable)— British Foreign Secretary Eden conferred with Allied commanders in France yesterday and, it was believed, discussed questions which would arise with surrender of the German army in the West.



Unconditional surrender, decreed at the Churchill-Roosevelt Casablanca conference, remains a fundamental Allied principle, but many problems would face field commanders in its application.

Lt.-Gen. Crerar, commander of the 1st Canadian Army, was among the generals with whom Mr. Eden conferred. Mr. Eden also saw Gen. Eisenhower, Gen. Montgomery, the French regional commissioner at Bayeux and the prefect of Caen.

TRIPLED IN TWENTY YEARS!

In the years 1923 to 1943, Bell Telephone plant in service has increased from 79 millions to over 234 millions.

THAT'S a lot of money . . . and a lot of plant. But when war came, those twenty years of long-range planning and large-scale development are what made it possible for the telephone to handle an unprecedented load with so little let-down in quality of service.

Today, extensions and new installations are strictly limited to those dictated by war necessity. But tomorrow the work will go on; tomorrow, new investments in telephone facilities will keep pace with new knowledge and new needs.

Buy War Savings Stamps and Certificates Regularly.

Let's not WOBBLE..

To maintain a reasonable balance between what you earn and what your dollars will buy in wartime, it has been necessary to put a ceiling on prices, to control wages, salaries and profits, and to distribute available goods on an equitable basis.

Because..

...higher costs of production would require higher prices for the things you buy

...higher prices would require higher wages and salaries

...higher wages and salaries would mean higher costs

and so on....in an endless spiral

Demands for higher selling prices, wages and profits must not be allowed to push up the cost of living. This would bring distress and confusion on the Home Front, shackle our war efforts now, and leave us with handicaps in the peace to come.

This is the thirteenth of a series being issued by the Government of Canada to emphasize the importance of preventing further increases in the cost of living now and deflation later.

Red Drives Indicate Goal is To Eliminate Romania and Take Ploesti Oil Fields

STARTED 4 DAYS AGO

By DANIEL DE LUCE
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Aug. 23—(AP)—A new Red army offensive, probably first signed to knock Romania out of the war and break Hitler's grip on the Balkans, smashed forward today at a 150-mile front beyond Jais to within 180 miles of Bucharest and 155 of the great Ploesti oil centre.

Advancing over the bodies of 25,000 German dead in three days while 12,855 others trudged wearily back to prison camps, Red Army groups under generals Rodion Y. Malinovsky and Fedor I. Tolbukhin drove within 31 miles of the mouth of the Danube.

General Konev's troops tried to stiffen war-weary Romanian divisions as Russian tanks rolled 30 miles south of Jassi. Tolbukhin's drive through Bessarabia headed cross country for a junction with Malinovsky in the Galati gap, the capture of which would make much of the Balkan area untenable for the enemy. Advances ranged to 64 miles. The Bessarabian capital of Bielsau was left trapped in a deep pocket on the Dniestr.

Bucharest in Panic

As the Red Army drive into Romania went through its fourth day, Bucharest was reported in panic with many of Premier Antonescu's formerly fanatical supporters openly discussing the chance of suing for peace. Each mile the Red Army advanced strengthened peace trumpers in Bulgaria, and here was new hope to Yugoslavia and Greece.

Romania, besides being Germany's greatest oil reservoir, is one of her largest breadbaskets.

Announcing Tuesday night that the two-pronged attack began four days ago, a Russian communique said the 2nd and 3rd Ukrainian fronts armies of generals Rodion Y. Malinovsky and Fedor Tolbukhin had swept through more than 300 towns, hospitals, had killing 25,000

Mass of People in Paris Silently, Hopefully Awaited Liberation Day

By DWIGHT L. PITKIN
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

The Germans entered Paris on June 14, 1940, in a lightning conquest of terror that stunned the world which thought the French army and the Maginot line invincible.

They goose-stepped up the broad Champs Elysees and under the Arc De Triomphe built by Napoleon. Hilter came and gloated at the Eiffel Tower.

The German occupation forces sought to win the French to their side, needling them with propaganda that the democracy of the third Republic was decadent and that France had a place in the German new totalitarian order. A small minority which always had been Francophile collaborated, but the mass of people in Paris and the rest of France silently and hopefully awaited the day of liberation. A vast underground army was organized throughout France.

Paris had experienced four years of queueing up for food, cycling or walking to work, curfew hours, firing squads, black markets and the strutting of Nazi officers who monopolized the best tables, the best shows and all the comforts that pre-war Paris had enjoyed.

Paris has suffered from Allied air raids against German targets within the area of the capital such as the Renault works and Le Bourget airfield. German radio continually pelted Paris with propaganda civilian casualties, which were estimated at 3,000 to 4,000.

But Paris had suffered more than in the First World War when the Germans besieged the city from a distance of 20 miles and fired shells from long-range guns that left scars still visible on some of the mellowgray buildings.

Since the German occupation began, the pre-war population was 2,220,746, has been virtually a ghost city, its young men prisoners of war in Germany, its children evacuated to the countryside. Lack of fuel has disorganized the transport system. There was no gasoline to operate the big green buses or taxicabs.

The Germans carried on their customary anti-semitic campaign, rounding up thousands of Jews who were sent away to concentration camps. A puppet press followed the Nazi line.

One feature of Paris which the Germans never dared change was the flame burning over the tomb under the Arc De Triomphe, of France's Unknown Soldier of the First Great War. But the custodians of the Shrine saved 4,000 francs for exceeding the gas quota allotted for the flame.

Capital Has Been Held In Bondage Over 4 Years

By JAMES M. LONG, AP STAFF WRITER

London, Aug. 23 —(AP)— Paris shook loose the shackles of four years of enemy bondage today and stood free once more, liberated by armed and unarmed tens of thousands of Frenchmen who swept into Nazis from the city's streets, while Allied armed might drew up around the capital.

A special communique from Gen. De Gaulle's headquarters in London announced the liberation after four days of street fighting that recalled scenes of Bastille Day when the mobs of Paris once before struck an historic blow for liberty.

This time, the communique said, the fight was led by 50,000 organized French forces of the interior, bolstered by hundreds of thousands more who joined in with whatever weapons they could muster.

The announcement touched off broadcasts in Frenchmen everywhere as the triumphant strains of "La Marseillaise" gushed again to the news of a French victory.

There was no word immediately that Allied troops had entered the city. But the French said they had seized all public buildings, the complete control of the situation, and that Marshal Philippe Petain's quislings who had not fled.

Paris, the City of Light, was back in French hands just four years and 74 days from the time Adolf Hitler's troops marched in. German troops, then at the flood tide of conquest, entered June 14, 1940.

The city became the first continental capital of a full-fledged ally to be freed from the Nazi domination. Rome has been taken, but Italy started the war as an enemy and now is of co-belligerent.

Gen. De Gaulle conferred with Gen. Eisenhower in France two days ago—presumably on details of civil affairs control of the capital which once more is the pride of all France.

(The BBC reported today the head of the French Committee of National Liberation had arrived in Rennes, on the Brittany peninsula, after visiting Cherbourg, Avranches and a number of other liberated French cities.)

There was no announcement after the De Gaulle-Eisenhower conference, but reports filed with the French, who freed the capital, indicated a provisional administration.

There was no indication in the French communique what caused it had been initiated as the German forces or how many had been captured. Allied airmen and ground days have been reporting the Nazis were getting out of the city to the east over every road.

A special communique said:

"On Saturday Aug. 19 in the morning the National Council of Resistance and the Paris Committee of Liberation, in accord with the national delegate, a member and representative of the provisional government of the French republic ordered general insurrection in Paris and the Parisian region.

"The F.F.I. (French Forces of the Interior), 50,000 strong, armed and supported by several hundred thousand unarmed patriots, went into action immediately.

"Yesterday, Aug. 22, after four days of fighting the enemy had been defeated everywhere. The patriots occupied all public buildings. Vichy representatives were arrested or have fled. So the people of Paris played a major part in the liberation of their capital.

"The Paris police, which was already on our side, took possession of the police prefecture and turned the Ile de la Cite into a fortress around which the German attack broke."

Trooper Marries Daughter of Major Who Rebuked Him

4

Welland, Aug. 23—(CP)—Trooper Lloyd Cross of the Three Rivers Regiment is home here on furlough after serving in Sicily and Italy with a story of marrying the daughter of an English Major who had been before a military court in Sicily for failure to salute.

It was in London's Victoria Station in 1942 that Cross failed to salute. A Major Wood rebuked him and Cross inquired for his number and unit. Next thing Cross knew he was before the court when cleared him after his advocate made contentions about saluting in various zones.

Happy to get out of that predicament, Cross went to a restaurant where he met a pretty girl. They began to talk and to a lieutenant Colonel and the Welland man learned she was Major Wood's fiancee, daughter of the hitsiting Major.

Proxy Husband Killed in Action

West Palm Beach, Fla., Aug. 23 (AP)—There'll be no happy reunion for Mr. and Mrs. Jerry C Layton, proxy bride and groom.

Layton, a staff sergeant in the air forces, was killed in a B-24 plane crash in Scotland, the War Department notified his wife, who hadn't seen since before their wedding.

Margaret Kohl became Mrs. Layton in a proxy marriage ceremony a year ago in the office of Judge Richard P. Robbins. She and the bridegroom signed while he was stationed here.

"He was due a furlough soon, said Mrs. Layton. "We had planned a second ceremony when he returned".

Berlin Says Yanks Land Small Force In S. W. France

London, Aug. 23 (CP)—American troops supported by French Partisans landed a small force at St. Jean De Luz in southwestern France six miles from the Spanish frontier yesterday, Berlin radio said today.

The broadcast attempts to reinforce the landing group were frustrated.

Spanish border reports last night announced Allied landings in the Bordeaux area, 110 miles farther north.

140-Mile Advance Made By American Troops Across French Alps

By NOLAND NORGAARD
(AP Staff Writer)

Rome, Aug. 23—(AP)—American troops of the 7th Army, in a spectacular surprise thrust deep into southern France through German defences, have entered the large industrial city of Grenoble, 140 airline miles north of the Mediterranean coast, it was announced today.

A swift-moving armored and motorized infantry column plunged into the city, long a hotbed of the French patriot movement, and French forces of the interior playing an effective support role," Allied Headquarters said.

This quick advance put Maj.-Gen. Alexander M. Patch's forward elements within less than 240 airline miles from the most southerly points officially announced as reaching by American troops south of Paris, and it appeared that the two Allied French fronts would be joined much sooner than originally thought possible.

Grenoble, 58 miles southeast of Lyon and situated on a river leading directly to the Rhone valley 80 miles to the west, is 80 miles or more beyond the last reported Allied positions in Southern France.

(A broadcast by radio France at Algiers said Allied forces were less than 21 miles from the Italian frontier but there was no confirmation.)

At Grenoble Allied forces were roughly only 70 airline miles from the Swiss frontier and the tactical purposes already had

50 PERSONS DIE WHEN PLANE HITS ENGLISH SCHOOL

Explosion Follows Crash of American Aircraft in Lancashire Village

34 WERE CHILDREN

Manchester, England, Aug. 23 (CP Cable)—A flaming American bomber crashed into the heart of the Lancashire village of Prestlich today, killed at least 50 persons—34 of them small children—injured 30 others and left an indefinite number unaccounted for.

The big machine, enveloped in flames, crashed into the infants' department of a church school, left it a mass of burning wreckage, bounced across the main street into a flower garage where between 20 and 30 servicemen were sheltering. It left a trail of burning oil in its wrecked it, and then set fire to all the wooden section of the village.

Fire brigades from all neighboring communities raced to the scene of havoc, where rescue workers were braving the flames to dig through the wreckage in search of little bodies, and soon had the fire under control, though not extinguished.

It was a difficult task to recover the bodies from the smashed rubble and it was impossible to make immediately an accurate count of the casualties.

But at least 50 bodies were recovered and were carried by teams of stretcher bearers to an improvised mortuary, where residents waited to identify their missing kin.

All the dead children were under five years of age and some of them were infants. Among them were some who had been sent away from London to escape the robot bombings.

Bodies of 16 adults — including three American soldiers—had been recovered late this afternoon and rescue workers said they expected they would find more bodies among the wreckage of the former garage which had been turned into a service station.

CANADIAN ARMY FIGHTS ITS WAY INTO DEAUVILLE

Way Now Opened for Another Big Slaughter In Vast Trap Set

NAZIS REELING BACK

By WILLIAM STEWART
(C.P. War Correspondent)

With the Canadian Army In France, Aug. 23 (CP Cable) — The Canadian army yesterday made the greatest gains for a single day's fighting in France as it swept forward after German retreating to the Seine.

The Germans are falling back everywhere but rearguards are standing to fight on some of the main roads and in a few towns. Netherlands and Belgian troops operating under Lt.-Gen. Crerar's command fought their way into Deauville on the English Channel coast while airborne troops, operating as infantry, reached Levegue on the Touques River and Annerville.

The way now was being opened for another big slaughter in a vast trap from the Channel coast south to the American line extending to the east as the Canadians and British forward 15 miles from captured Vimoutiers towards Orbec, where they were 18 miles from the Risle River, last sizeable water barrier before the Seine.

British artillery as well as some Netherlands guns were supporting the drive on Deauville. The Germans have some guns and mortars in and around the resort town but are not likely to put up prolonged resistance. The town is at the mouth of the Touques River and good coast roads lead east to the Seine.

Some Canadian soldiers taking part in the newest push are short and others are rolling forward in a convoy over good unscarred roads that run through open villages that ran through many of the towns untouched by battle

Flight of Battered 7th Army Across the Seine River Has Appearance of "Rout"

British and Canadians Drive Enemy Tighter Against Seine

By WES GALLAGHER, AP WAR CORRESPONDENT

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Aug. 23 —(AP)— French patriots have liberated Paris, Gen. Charles De Gaulle's headquarters announced today, as Allied airmen described the flight of the battered German 7th Army across the Seine as having the appearance of a "rout."

On the left of the Allied line British and Canadian armies raced ahead 10 to 15 miles, pushing the Germans tighter against the Seine and into the fire of American flanking forces moving toward the sea along the left bank.

Half Way Across France

Meanwhile an American armored column drove more than half way across France from Grenoble beyond the ancient town of Sens, only 160 miles from the German border in the northeast near the Saar town of Neunkirchen.

Supreme headquarters had no comment on reported Allied landings near Bordeaux in Southwestern France. If such landings took place it was believed they were on an organized basis.

It is regarded as unlikely that Gen. Eisenhower would undertake a dangerous amphibious expedition to capture an area which the Germans say they forfeit their best to get out of and which could be had by the Allies for the asking.

While Paris is in French hands and the enemy flees, the German rearguards at Rambouillet and Etampes to the south which are engaging American tank units.

Paris In Every Hand

While the capture of the capital was certain to have a tremendous effect throughout France, the Germans and bring joy to every French home, militarily Paris already was out of the picture.

The Allies had been outflanked by American bridgeheads across the Seine to the northwest and southeast and some radio reports which were not confirmed at supreme headquarters, already placed American tanks at Meaux, less than 25 miles from Chateau-Thierry, scene of bitter fighting in the First Great War.

The new Allied trap of Field Marshal Gen. Guenther Von Kluge's retreating forces along the left bank of the Seine appeared to be closing on all sides as the Germans gave up all attempts at an organized rearguard action.

At the latest reckoning Allied planes hammered the German columns with unprecedented fury and still more punishment today as the Germans struggled to escape the 600 TANKS Ragged.

Other German troops fled toward the river where hundreds of river craft of every description from rubber boats to coastal steamers had been gathered to ferry them across. But the Germans' tanks, trucks, vehicles and locomotives fell before the guns and bombs of the Allied air forces. Supreme Headquarters said, while a belated German air force attempt to give the enemy ground troops cover resulted in the destruction of 77 enemy aircraft.

In the eastward drive along a front extending for 35 miles British, Canadian and Belgian troops captured Lisieux and Laigle.

Allied headquarters said Pont L'Eveque, 10 miles north of Lisieux, also has been captured.

On the inland side of the giant trap being forged for the German army is still remaining overland of the Seine river American troops driving northeast towards the sea on a course parallel to the Seine, reaching points near Evreux and Bernay.

Here, a whole German area south of the river was contracting rapidly, and the possibility of the pincers' pace would wipe out German resistance between the Seine and river within the next 48 to 60 hours.

By ROSS MUNRO
(C.P. War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army West of the Seine, Aug. 23 (CP) Cable — Canadian army armor and infantry drove eastward today in a relentless offensive which swept in town after town and promised to carry them swiftly to the River Seine.

On some of roads British and Canadian troops are moving as they never have since they broke through Infantry are making forced marches by day and night and shuttle services of trucks are rushing many of them straight to the forward areas.

The Canadians are advancing so fast that headquarters staffs can scarcely keep abreast of reports of new gains pouring in from the quickly-changing battlefront.

From France L. A. Miller wrote: "It is much worse here than in Belleville. We get it in the air, smokes, at least in England one could buy a few. Believe me, you don't have to send them too much longer, or if you do our future address will be Berlin."

"Your latest shipment of cigarettes arrived at the most opportune time because I was completely out of smokes for the first time in months. Getting fags here in France is no easy matter, so you can see how much appreciate the Canadian cigarettes really were," writes Pte. R. Trenton 'Flyers' Down 'Bombers' By 6 to 1 Score

Continuing where they left off as baseball champions of the No. 1 Command of R.C.A.F., Trenton Sox's Trenton ballsters defeated the Mountain View Bombers, nine 6 to 1 in the initial game of the district R.C.A.F. playdowns on the home diamond last evening. The second game will be played at Mountain View Thursday evening, the winner of this series continuing to the 1944 No. 1 Command championship at Toronto.

"Lefty" Garnet was on the hilltop for the Trenton winners and was never in serious difficulty as he limited the "bombers" to five scattered hits. A three run splurge in the third inning decided the game for Trenton. FL. Webb, the Trenton catcher, wielded the big and potent stick for the winners as he drove in hits in four tries. Paul Raymond, former Montreal Les Canadien hockey star, made several defensive plays that bordered on the sensational.

It was a battle of lefthand pitchers as "Lefty" Lafrundoire, former Montreal pitcher, was on the mound for the Bombers going the route and allowing eight hits. Thompson, the Bombers' catcher, sustained a broken finger in the second inning and was replaced by Arthur Wallington. Mountain View centre-fielder, starred for the losers by making three fine running catches in the middle garden. The umpires were Sergts. Johnny Pinnol of Trenton, and "Dutch" Cain of Mountain View.

sealed off the Nazi forces in southern France from communication with the centre of Northern Italy.

The Allies also were in position by striking westward, to cut off German units reported moving from the Mediterranean beachhead along the Rhone Valley—the main route to Northern France.

An Associated Press dispatch from Geneva said Berlin front of the interior were reported attacking Dijon.

An Allied headquarters statement on the northward drive said "enemy resistance was spotty during the advance". Thirteen hours is reported to house fighting occurred at Digne.

It was there that the Allies captured Maj.-Gen. Hans Schubert, a German corps commander.

On the Italian mountainous coast, a bitter battle still raged in encircled Toulon, French seaport and military had pushed virtually into the outskirts of Marseille, and the French continued the siege of Toulon.

The Allied command announced that the total number of prisoners taken since the landings had risen to more than 70,000.

Inside Toulon French troops yesterday blasted their way to points half way between the railway tracks which bisect the city. The naval arsenal was half a mile away and the docks only a few hundred yards.

Encirclement of Marseille continued on a broad front, with American troops driving northward from Aubagne and last reported only a dozen miles from the outskirts of the city. Meanwhile French forces attacking frontally from the Aubagne Sector, were within the city's outskirts. American columns were fighting three miles northeast of Aubagne in the Sierre, a virtually land-locked body of water northwest of the city.

Rotary Carnival To Hold Matinee Next Saturday

Favored with ideal weather, the Rotary Carnival now enjoying a week's run at the Belleville Fair Railway grounds at the foot of Bridge Street, is proving a tremendous large crowd of entertainment seekers each evening.

Youth of the city was apparently ride-minded as this popular form of entertainment proved to be the main centre of attractions. The Ferris wheel, merry-go-round, Chairo wheels, aerial spins and other mechanical attractions did a land office business, and at times had long queues of people, awaiting their turn.

(The many games also had their devotees, and throughout the carnival proved the most popular with the younger element of the city.

Interest in the draw for the Rotary "Dollar Baby" — a handsome 1944 Chevrolet coupe, offered on easy bills, twenty-five in all, is gradually mounting. The Rotary Club tickets are being sold by Rotarian Charlie Symons and his assistants, and the response has been gratifying, proved a popular place for patrons of the carnival and prizes will be made on Saturday night, and ticket-holders do not have to be present in order to win the coveted dolly.

As a special favor to the children, and entirely with the idea of encouragements, a special matinee has been arranged for Saturday afternoon. This will give, it is felt by the Rotary Club, those who are unable to attend the evening performances during the week, an opportunity to attend the carnival at a time when they are free to do so.

The carnival has struck a popular note with city residents, and Rotary officials are confident that, with weather permitting, attendance will exceed the figures of last year, when a handsome sum of money assisted in relining the coffers of the Crippled Children's Fund of the service club.

Flying Kites Near Hydro Lines Dangerous Practice Officials Warn

Kids and kites combined last night to effectively disrupt hydro power in the city for approximately three quarters of an hour.

The youngsters, flying kites in the vicinity of the Stewart-Carnegie Alemite athletic field, steered their aerial playthings into the power lines with the result that the kite-lines became entangled in the wires causing a short-circuit, and blowing of fuses.

The kites apparently got away from their youthful owners, for had any of the boys had the lines in their hands when they contacted the high tension lines, serious results might have occurred.

Public Utilities officials today warned parents and youngsters as well, that the kite-flying near power lines is a dangerous practice, and if continued may have drastic consequences.

Bulgaria Makes Another Tentative Bid for Peace

London, Aug. 22. (CP)—The Bulgarian government of Premier Ivan Bagrianov put forth another tentative bid for peace Tuesday night but Turkish dispatches said it was considering extension of the war to at least a part of the Balkan territory Bulgaria gained as a German ally.

"Bulgaria does not wish to take part in this world war", Foreign Minister Parvan Dragonov said, asserting that his country's declaration of war on Britain and the United States had been a mistake and that "Her interests are confined to the Balkans".

He flatted these "interests" embrace Thrace and Macedonia in an outlet through the former to the Aegean, securing a sore point in Balkan diplomacy—as well as certain "vital" economic outlets. He referred to withdraw Bulgarian garrison troops from what he called "non-Bulgarian" territories in Yugoslavia.

Meanwhile Greek government in Cairo already has expressed its opposition to any peace that would give Greece of Thrace, of Macedonia and similar opposition undoubtedly would come from a reconstituted Yugoslavia.

All available information indicates that peace talks reported conducted in Turkey between Bulgarian and Allied representatives have not been successful as the British and the United States would not listen to an armistice—unconditional surrender.

Pity All Those Who Suffer With Hay Fever

If a heavy-eyed pink-nosed individual stops a friend on the street and advises him with "Good Bordig," don't think too harshly of him.

He is a victim from a rayweed patch and the verbal effort is the best facsimile of "Good Morning" that he can produce.

Hay fever, we are frank, he will answer, "Dod so dood." It is hay feverese, the universal language of the Hayfeverites, who are allergic to the rayweed pollen—and pay through the nose.

And there isn't much they can do about it.

When those warm summer zephyrs, beloved by poets, and wintry vessel advertising writers, coma sighing across the country-side, laden with ragweed pollen, these poor unfortunates hop from breezes to sneezes in two swift jiffys.

And it ain't funny, brother.

Hours they try to alleviate an unscrathable itch in the nasal region.

50 PERSONS DIE

Half the school, which only yesterday had re-assembled after summer vacations, was destroyed, including the infants' department which housed 41 tots.

The flame, according to an eye-witness who was standing at a window at the time, was flying low, suddenly burst into flames, turned over on its back, "smashed into the top of the school and flashed across the road onto the canteen."

"Within a few seconds after the witness said, "the whole building was a mass of flames."

Lend-Lease Must Continue Until Defeat of Enemy Says F.D.R; Has Cost 28 Billions

Washington, Aug. 23 —(CP)— President Roosevelt told Congress today that lend-lease aid should continue until the unconditional surrender of both Japan and Germany and emphasized that United States lend-lease has been solely for the defence of the United States.

The President's report covered the operations of the three Marches, 1941, to June 30, 1944, during which total lend-lease has reached $28,270,000,000, of which $4,000,000,000 was disbursed during the quarter ended June 30.

Apparently taking note of statements by some persons that this vast program of Allied aid should be curtailed or dropped after Germany is defeated, the President, in forwarding a quarterly report to Congress, asserted:

Strength in Unity.

"We should not permit any weakening of this system of combined war supply to delay final victory a single day. . . .

"We know now that by combining our power we can speed the day of certain victory. We know also that only by continuing our unity can we secure a just and durable peace."—

The President said lend-lease is playing a vital role in current offensives that find the Allies "moving relentlessly" over the roads which lead to Berlin and Tokyo.

This report comes at a time when Congress is bothered by rumors that a move is afoot to carry lend-lease operations to the United Kingdom into the post-war period.

The State Department has denied, in general terms that such an extension is being considered but did not rule out the possibility.

More than 42 per cent of total lend-lease has gone to the United Kingdom and 27.5 per cent to Russia.

None to Canada.

The report comments on the fact that while more than $400,000,000 worth of lend-lease has gone to Canada, it was for trans-shipment to the United Kingdom or other United Nations for further fabrication or for the use of United Nations forces fighting in Canada.

No lend-lease aid is furnished to the Canadian Government.

The Lend-Lease Act was extended this year until June 30, 1945. Some legislators have said this government should not be too hasty about standing it again if Germany collapses meantime. Certain government officials, though, have felt the act should continue to apply to Britain after the war has been reduced to operations against Japan, while others believe the aid should go to countries in the European theatre only to the extent that it directly helps to defeat Japan.

Reverse lend-lease was estimated in value at more than $3,000,000,000. The report emphasized, however, that ultimate measurement of aid given and received could be found only in terms of battles won, enemies killed and captured, and hundreds of thousands of lives saved, rather than in dollar figures.

The report said the geographical position and material strength of the United States has been called upon to give most forward winning the war in production and in money, while the major Allies are giving more in lives, destruction of their homelands, and in suffering of their people.

39,000 Planes Included.

Aid furnished since the lend-lease program began nearly 3½ years ago includes 39,000 planes, 15 per cent of American output. Allies purchased another 7,000 for cash and the United States retained 173,000.

The report also has leased 1,400 naval vessels of all types, the great majority being landing craft, patrol torpedo boats and similar craft, but including a "few score" larger combat vessels, such as convoy escort aircraft carriers and corvettes.

Other aid has included 511 cargo ships of 1,000 gross tons or over and 1,264 merchant and auxiliary craft of under 1,000 gross tons; 26,000 tanks and 697,000 ordnance vehicles, jeeps and trucks. The Allies have purchased an additional 7,000 tanks and 270,000 trucks, with the United States retaining for its own use 36,000 tanks and 1,300,000 other military motor vehicles.

Order Discloses Severe Treatment Of Italian Patriots

Rome, Aug. 23—(AP)—Increasing severity of enemy treatment of Italian patriots harassing the Nazi rear areas in Northern Italy was disclosed by the 5th army's capture of an order from Colonel Von Richman, which decreed immediate shooting of "anyone assisting the criminal and treacherous partisans by giving them food or lodging."

He announced he would support "any officer who executes our customary degree of restraint in his choice of measures for dealing with the partisans," adding, "all civilians arrested in the course of reprisals against the partisans will be sent to concentration camps and shipped to Germany as laborers."

Only minor activity was reported on the entire Italian front, with the Poles continuing to clear the enemy from their few remaining positions on the south side of the Metauro River on the Adriatic sector.

CANADIAN ARMY

Forces of Ontario, Western and French-Canada troops who had a bridgehead across the Vie River seized Thursday, troops were well on their way into the picturesque hill country by dawn today. Vimoutiers was occupied during the day and the Canadians marched two miles beyond to the Perrenes, which was crossed without difficulty.

The Western infantry swept through Camapville, the east of Vimoutiers, which French-speaking soldiers marched through that area with other eastern infantry.

Meeting pursuit forces untangled themselves quickly from the battle of the Falaise-Argentan gap to take part in the advance toward the field. Behind them the bridgehead area is teeming with activity. Equipment is moving everywhere and long convoys of supplies are following up behind the guns, which are moving along right behind the columns of infantry.

French Tricolors are out again in the newly-liberated villages but the troops haven't time to join in celebrations and their quick passing leaves the civilians surprised.

Farmers who left their cottages at the Canadian army attack home from the Caen area were heading home again with their horse-drawn two-wheeled carts piled high with linen and furniture.

The new country into which the advance is being made is hilly and wooded in contrast to the dusty wheat fields around Caen.

The War Today—
Liberation of Paris by Patriots Glorious Moment for the French

By DEWITT MacKENZIE
(A.P. War Analyst)

Liberation of Paris—most glorious moment in the rebirth of a great nation—gives us striking confirmation of a momentous fact which has been emerging gradually from the blaze of battle—that Hitler has lost control of the great Nazi machine, both civil and military, through which he has ruled France since his tragic collapse.

It is merely that his organization has gone to pieces in Normandy, or in Brittany, or in Southern France, but that his entire regime of occupation is in a state of dissolution. He no longer can call on the north to help the south or the east to aid the west. The vast civilian population which he enslaves is out of hand. His hold in France is, in his own language, Kaput—smashed.

The significance of this is, of course, that France during all these tragic years has been the main German shield against attack by the Western Allies. We always knew that the only way Hitler could be defeated was by invasion of France.

When the Allies finally drove ashore in Normandy, in the greatest and most dangerous adventure of its kind in history, there was no anticipation that Hitler's machine would go to pieces as it has done. Its collapse means a speedy end to his power throughout all western Europe.

This breaking up of Hitler's organization in France has been brought about by many factors. Among these has been the cutting of vital communications over a long period by the dominating Allied air forces. Western Europe has been sleshed to ribbons. Finally came the invasions, and the flanking, of Paris which is the nerve centre of the entire country.

And then there have been the French forces of the interior — the vast underground army of patriots who are called "Maquis." The measure of their contribution to the reclamation of their country is vast. Throughout all the years of enslavement and terrible privation they have kept the flame of independence burning.

So, justice has made a happy gesture in decreeing that the Maquis should be the ones to take over their capital from the Boche.

No Steps Taken To Train Canadian Fleet Air Arm

Ottawa, Aug. 23—(CP)—No steps have yet been taken to train an all-Canadian fleet air arm, a Naval spokesman said today commenting on a report from Kingston, Ont., that a flying school near there was to be used for such a purpose.

Canadians are training at Kingston, Pensacola, Fla., and other Royal Navy fleet air stations, but on completion of their courses they will enter the Royal Navy and not the R. C. N., the spokesman added.

He added it was possible some might find their way to the flight decks of the two R. N. flattops whose sea-crews are all-Canadian.

"Our fleet air arm development has gone no further than the blueprint stage," he said. "However, when we furnished sea crews for the two R. N. carriers we were looking to the day when we would have flattops of our own."

General Council Of United Church Meets in London

Ottawa, Aug. 23 (CP)—Stories of the cool planning and determination exhibited by senior officers and devotion to duty of medical and other personnel during the Italian campaign were related last night with release by Defence Headquarters of citations covering awards of decorations to eight officers and 12 other ranks.

All awards were announced previously.

Maj.-Gen. B. M. Hoffmeister, 37, of Vancouver, commander of a Canadian Division in Italy, received a second Bar to the Distinguished Service Order for "inspiring confidence and a fine offensive spirit in all so that between the 24th and 30th of May it (the division) broke out of the Hitler line, forced the crossings of the Melfa and Liri rivers, captured three villages, destroyed very many tanks and self-propelled guns, took many prisoners and killed many enemies and advanced a total distance of 35 kilometres (about 22 miles), driving the enemy before it."

Maj.-Gen. (then Brig.) D. C. Spry, 31 of St. Jonns, Que., youngest Major-General in the Canadian Army, won the D.S.O. for handling his brigade with "skill and determination" May 23 before the launching of the main attack by a Canadian division on the Hitler line.

Creamery Butter Output Down

Toronto, Aug. 23. (CP)—The Ontario Department of Agriculture said today in its monthly dairy report for July that the output of creamery butter was down in every district of the province. YOUR AA RATION IS AN "ISSUE" OF VITAL AMMUNITION

THINK!.. before you waste a drop!

GASOLINE for all purposes—civil and military—comes from the one common petroleum pool of the Allied Nations! Oil control in Canada must keep our withdrawals from this common pool down to a minimum. Your AA ration was not given to you for pleasure driving. It represents the outside limit of what the average motorist should use for essential wartime driving including voluntary war work.

In this country, where train, bus and street car systems cannot alone carry all essential traffic, the motor car is an indispensable link in the nation's transportation chain. It is to help keep civil transportation rolling that your AA gasoline allowance is made. Only in instances where this basic allowance is insufficient for some specific essential service or war job, are extra rations being allowed.

Remember that your gasoline ration is an "issue" of ammunition. Don't waste it. Don't squander it on needless trips. It is your obligation to make your AA allowance do a real wartime job. Every gallon we can go without here at home means that much more for the fighting men.

LESS CIVILIAN GAS MEANS MORE "FIGHTING GAS" FOR THE FORCES

NO. 9 OF A SERIES OF ANNOUNCEMENTS ISSUED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY, HONOURABLE C. D. HOWE, MINISTER

Answering YOUR QUESTIONS about the GASOLINE SHORTAGE

Which is the most highly mechanized army in the world? . . . Canada's Army. What type of gasoline is standard for all military vehicles overseas? . . . A fine grade automobile gasoline—80 octane "all purpose" gasoline. How much more gasoline is needed to fight this war then the last? . . . 80 times as much!

Words of Inspiration

A few days ago over the radio broadcast from France was heard a voice uttering the words, "They are coming."

These are the words which are swiftly spreading through France, for the Allies are coming with liberation. Through France they are heard, throughout Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Greece, Albania, these words will be heard. They are the marching words of the advancing United Nations pushing before them the armies of aggression and cutting up the armies of Hitlerism Germany.

The pattern of the decline of German military and air strength is already seen in the east front and on the two French fronts and the Italian front.

News of the war today is the news of victories of the Allies, retreat and crushing up of German armies.

The United Nations have entered into the fourth of their strategy and are bearing the enemy before them, the enemy that liked to consider himself invincible and to foster that opinion in the nations he hoped to overrun.

Normandy has been a success of the greatest magnitude, territory gained, the French patriots taking their share of the fighting with the Allies, helping to free liberation of their homeland, vast wheeling of Allied armies which are destroying Hun manpower in traps in a way the enemy never expected he would have to endure.

With the victories spreads the news all across Europe of the coming end of Hitlerism and German militarism. The Gestapo cannot keep out the news of the progress of the United Nations. Germany must be realizing the plight of her armies and the inevitability of the collapse of the country and the smashing defeat of the armies in which she had trusted to chain the world in slavery. Her legions instead of conquering are going to pieces in defeat.

To the Germans the words, "They are coming" seem like the knell of fate. To the overrun and dominated peoples they are the sweetest music continental Europe has ever heard.

For Victory

Allied victories which are contributing so much to the defeat of Germany by the defeat and destruction of the German armies are naturally requiring a toll of the forces of the United Nations in the fighting. Summary of Canadian figures shows that in the June period the Canadian army casualties have increased. The stepping up of operations of the greatest importance is the cause for the increase. These operations so vital towards victory have the compensating value in that they are shortening the war by the very intensity with which they are being carried out and that they thereby prevent greater loss of life. Stress has been placed on the importance of a speedy ending of the conflict by the leaders of all the United Nations. All have at the enemy to crush him and so bring to a close the greatest of wars at the earliest possible date and save the lives of many. That the strength of the United Nations on the field will have that result no one doubts.

Many are giving their lives and their lifeblood on the fields of France or are suffering the wounds of war and their heroic service is on the hearts of all Canadians, who pray for their fellow countrymen and for the servicemen of the Allied Nations as their tireless and selfless efforts bring nearer the peace for which the world yearns. They are serving nobly to remove aggression and tyranny from the face of the earth.

They are engaged in the noblest of tasks, accomplished at personal danger for the sake of others and the freedom of mankind.

So the home front must strive its utmost in the same selfless spirit to make its fullest contribution to the victory whenever it comes.

Maginot Line Mentioned

The name Maginot Line is again in the news. Before the war it was looked upon as impregnable, it was the hope of France. But the Hun disregard of the neutrality of Holland and Belgium permitted the Germans to outflank the great defence line to expose France to the invasion of the Germanic hordes of Hitler's blitz armies. The miseries of France during the war have been suffered since the enemy outflanked the line and to the present. Now that time is soon to end it is expected as the United Nations stoutly continue their drive against the enemy.

An Apt Picture

German prisoners dignified and chastened moving along French roads to prison camp are an apt picture of the approaching end of the evil force which has dominated Europe. Hitler who staged the thrill descent in Munich and got himself into prison where he wrote "Mein Kampf" ("My Struggle") is moving to the same position. As his armies are being cut up in France, so his power to strike in Europe is tottering. Such is the sign or disintegration of Nazi tyranny.

Swift March of Events

Everyone who was old enough in 1939 remembers with what speed the armies of aggression were moving. Soon the objective of Adolf Hitler's thirst for power and spite against the world. Now the wheel of fortune has come full circle and Hitler and his legions are moving down the swift descent to defeat and destruction. The momentum of their weight of crime and slaughter is carrying them headlong to the abyss, the natural end of tyrants and aggressors.

Events in every theatre of the war are so good that well may the human race be optimistic. The sweep of events on the battlefield, in the air and on the sea gives high hopes. Confidence of the ultimate triumph of good and freedom over the robber German nation is proven. The cause of liberty is the cause of right and righteousness and must triumph.

It has been shown that there are enough good in the world to bring to judgment those men and nations who have defied the laws of Heaven and of decency.

There is the great hope of the world, that so many more nations want peace and security than are represented, that peace and security will progress.

Today Hitler if he did what he did in 1939 must be looking forward and pondering how long it has to be before the end comes and if anything will save him. Like a criminal driven into a trap he is hoping for something to rescue him from the judgment of this world on the battlefield and in the courts of humanity. His criminal conquests are fast running through his fingers like finest sand. How far is the end of Germany away?

Axis Keeps Up Appearances

(New York Times)

Felicitations by Mr. Hull set forth between Berlin and Tokyo, and between each of those capitals and the seat of Italian Fascist power, wherever that portable seat happens to be at the moment. Is Italy fallen, is Germany ruined, is Japan clinging desperately to the ragged edge? One would not know it from the exchange of tender messages.

The Emperor congratulates Der Fuehrer. Der F. sends Il Duce "my most heartfelt wishes for your personal well-being." Il Duce extends his warmest compliments to Der F. and Japan speaks in crimp. Gangsters must hang together.

To the cold and distant eye, it all is like Christmas cards out of season, or, say, like confetti-throwing at a funeral. Stripped of its flowers, each massive boils down to: "You are still alive. Nice work."

The multitude that does not reduce itself to unity is confusion; the unity which does not depend upon the multitude is tyranny.—Pascal.

ABOUT FISHERMEN

Some fellows fish for the market, and fish are their stock in trade,
But others may come empty-handed, and still for their toil be repaid.
For some who go fishing are dreamers.
Alone, on the lake or a stream,
Away from the roar of the city, they may capture the thrill of a dream.

Still others are lovers of nature and watchers of creatures and things.
They watch the deer come to the water;
they hear all the animal sings.
They know life is teeming about them;
God's miracles often they see.
Should the day give them nothing but wonders, contented they'd manage to be.

And then there are fishermen-thinkers.
Their minds are cast forth like a net
And to them a good though is as thrilling as any great fish they may get.
They ponder God's purpose in all things,
and whether the fish bite or no,
If a truth they have managed to capture,
then happily homeward they go.

"The scoreless wars against—could hear every word the women folkshad we were saying!"

Civilians, Turned Soldiers, Learn About Killing Tactics the Hard Way

(By ERNIE FYFE)

On the Western Front — (By Wireless.)—The way of an invasion turned out to be all very new to Pte. Tommy Cox, the 20-year-old Division Infantryman we were writing about yesterday.

It was new to thousands of others also, for they hadn't specially trained in hedgerow fighting. So they had to learn it the way a dog learns to swim. They learned.

As we said yesterday, this Tommy Clayton, the soldier of men, has killed four of the enemy for sure, and probably dozens of snipers once. He wears an Expert Rifleman's badge and soon will have the proud badge of Marksmanship. He's worn only by those who have been through the mill.

Three of his four victims he got in one long blast of his Canadian automatic rifle. He was stationed in the bushes at a bend in a gravel road, covering a crossroads about 90 yards ahead of him.

Suddenly three German soldiers came out a side road and foolishly began to talk right in the middle of the crossroads. The B.A.R. has 23 bullets in a clip.

Tommy let them have the whole clip. The three Germans went down, never to get up.

His fourth one he thought was a Jap when he killed him. In the early days of the invasion lots of soldiers thought they were fighting Japs, scattered in with the German troops. They were actually Mongolian Russians, with certain Oriental features, who resembled the Japs in the unfriendly Allied eyes.

On this fourth killing, Clayton was covering an infantry squad as it worked forward along a hedgerow. There were snipers in the hedgerow. Tommy Clayton spotted one and sprayed the tree with his automatic rifle and down tumbled the man he thought was a Jap.

To show how little anyone who hasn't been through war can know about it—do you want to know how Clayton looked his sniper?

Here's how:

Tommy's bullet passes smack over your head it doesn't sing; it pops the sound of a .22 rifle going off. That's because the bullet's rapid passage creates a vacuum behind it, the air going back with such force to fill this vacuum that it collides with itself and makes a resounding "pop."

Clayton didn't know what caused this, and I tried to explain.

"You know what Einstein is?" I said. "You learned that in high school."

And Tommy said, "Einie, I never went past the third grade."

But Tommy is highly intelligent and his sensitivities are fine. You don't have to know much about war, you only have to know what things indicate when they happen.

Well, Clayton learned that the pop of a bullet over his head preceded the actual rifle report by a fraction of a second, because the sound of the rifle exploding had to travel some distance before hitting his ear, the "pop" being merely a warning signal to listen for the crack of a sniper's rifle a moment later.

Through much practice he had learned to tell the difference in the sound almost exactly. And so out of this sensitive ability, and learning, he had the knowledge to shoot into the right direction and cut-off the bushed Jap" sniper.

Clayton's weirdest experience would be funny if it weren't so loaded with danger. He was returning with a patrol one moonlit night when the commander called a halt. Then Tommy leaped right through a hedge and, spotting a foxhole, dashed into it.

To his amazement and fright, there was a German in the hole sitting pretty, holding a machine pistol in his hands.

Clayton shot him three times in the chest before you could say scat. Then the commander moved. And then Tommy realized the man had been dead for days, his body shooting a corpse.

The worst experience of the war, he says, is artillery fire, and the jarring vagueness of too long in a slit trench, unable to distinguish the noise and fear, the cell by cell exhaustion, the blinding of the shock wound you say follows nameless day. And the constant march into enemy fire of your own small quota of chances for survival.

Those are the things that wear and destroy. And soldiers like Tommy Clayton don't break because they are good soldiers and they have a duty they cannot decline.

Five Americans March 750 Huns In Canadian Lines

With the 1st Canadian Army in France, (Reuter)—Five American soldiers were the toast of the officers' mess today after having marched 750 Germans into the Canadian lines.

The Americans, who must be nameless, the censors said, became the first men captured by the Germans and trapped inside Falaise gap.

But a Canadian officer said they accomplished their feat with fast talk and the bluff that they were the street vacuum cleaner salesman. They up and told the Germans they sold the Germans they would get through the lines and see that artillery shelling guided on the Germans would surrender.

The Germans quickly agreed. The Yanks went off and came back after a suitable length of time, and told the Germans they had fixed it for the shelling to cease for 30 minutes. Then the guileless Germans eagerly lined up and the Americans marched them into the Canadian area.

The cream of the jest is that by chance the Shelling did cease during this parade of the wooden soldiers.

Ayrshire Sets High Record Milk Production

Ottawa, Aug. 23 —(CP)— The Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association announced today that Chestermere Ruth, owned by J. A. Watson, Strathmore, Alta., has established a Canadian Ayrshire production record of 34,718 pounds of milk, 793 pounds butterfat, with an average test of 4.28 per cent fat. It is the highest record by an Ayrshire in the two-year-old class of the record of performance.

The mark also is the highest made in that class by an Ayrshire on two year test. Former leaders established records on three milkings a day, but not on a record based on the lactation year.

The previous high mark was set by Hyrell, owned by the College of Agriculture at Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere, Que., with 31,091 pounds of milk and 692 pounds of butterfat on three milkings a day.

KERNELS IN THE NECK

In a talk about tonsils and adenoids published here recently, I said that in my opinion there was no evidence that the enlarged tonsils and adenoids—commonly called "tonsils"—that is, enlarged pharyngeal or third tonsil) may be responsible for a child's poor health, as what people commonly call "tonsils" in the throat and the small cervical adenoids. That is to say the "tonsils" and adenoids, commonly "glands" along the sides of the neck from under the ears to the top of the shoulders. Such glands are sometimes somewhat tender, and can be felt as small lumps, as well as small swellings when they are quite inflamed.

This is merely my opinion, remember, and I agree that if any such trouble or obstruction of normal breathing should have a tonsil operation and adenoidectomy, provided the tonsils and adenoids had failed to shrink after X-ray treatment. I also advise the operation if the child had "hernia" in the throat.

It must be remembered that herein lie the neck may be due to several other causes than tonsils or adenoids. Generally a child with middle ear infection or "running ear" has kernels on the same side of the neck. In fact, that is the one more decayed tooth—which no-body can find should also be suspected of having caused the trouble. Also, as well cared for child should be expected to have any serious illness usually more or less cervical adenitis (kernels) clears up when the tonsils are properly filled. Any chronic infection in the throat may be the cause of the abscess may cause kernels in the neck. Even chronic eczema may be the cause of kernels in the neck.

Tuberculosis of the lymph nodes in the neck or elsewhere is the commonest form of "scrofula." This condition, tuberculous adenitis, whether lymph nodes or "glands" in the neck alone are involved or whether the disease has other parts of the body, say those around the throat, the lungs, the bones, the hip-joint and those behind the intestines, is not contagious in the ordinary sense. It is so important that we shall only mention it briefly here. A more detailed discussion is to follow.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

How Is the Nose to Take the Place of Lungs?

Some of the specialists in this building carries a plate. O.P. Now, this specialist charged only charged a fee of $5 to $10 for office consultation, but when I went to him he wanted $35 to $50 for cleaning the teeth (prophylaxis, as they call it) and $75 to $100 for filling one tooth. Is this considered a fair charge for the same service. I would like to know whether you think it is right when the war suddenly ended that they survive on the profits of the war or will still have long to make money to spend?

Answer—Dentists are very scarce in all trades including ours. Such charges are unjustifiable in the public think they know more or have more skill than a specialist although the trick "specialists" have had no more training than and no more experience than honest general practitioners have been doing.

Leg Pains

Is it harmful to paint the leg with iodine? Is it make-up?

(T.G.A.)

Answer—No.

Ain't We Got Fungus?

One wonders how many contractor employers of the feet at camp. Since he returned from the front he developed in the forehead gives any relief. Ain't we got fun? Answer—Yes. Any suggestion to offer? (H.W.)

Answer—Send a stamped envelope bearing your address, and ask for pamphlet on Foot Itch. Important precautions are those for washing feet and other things in contact with infected feet, to prevent infection occurs.

HALCYON DAYS

"Halcyon days" means "times of peace and tranquility."

It is an ancient phrase that came to us from Greek mythology.

According to the most usual version of the myth, Ceyx was drowned while going to consult an oracle and his body was cast upon the shore.

The gods informed his wife Alcyone or Halcyone, daughter of Aeolus, of his death. She found her dead husband on the shore and threw herself into the sea.

The gods, out of compassion for their mutual affection transformed Ceyx and Alcyone into birds known as halcyons, popularly identified with a species of kingfisher.

This bird, it was believed, spent seven days during the coldest time of the winter in building a floating nest upon the sea and hatching its eggs. Seven days more were required for brooding. During the seven days when the halcyon was building its nest and brooding, the winds ceased to blow, the sea subsided and the weather became calm.

Therefore the period of seven days, before and after the winter solstice—the shortest day of the year—was called "halcyon days."

Later it was supposed that the peacemaking or kingfisher had power to calm the weather and the sea during the changing tides and waves.

According to another curious belief, if a fish fell, was dried and hung up by the head its bill would always point to the quarter from which the wind was blowing.

Shakespeare refers several times to these ancient beliefs.

In I King Henry VI Joan of Arc says to the French: "Good Martin's summer, halcyon days, since first these were ordained."

And in King Lear, Kent, speaking of Oswald's steward Oswald, says to Cornwall: "Such smiling rogues as these, like rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain which are too intrinse t'unloose; smooth every passion that in the natures of their masters."

LONDON LETTER

By DOUGLAS AMABON

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 23—(CP)— Front-page headlines told of Russian victories in Russia, of a breakthrough in Normandy, of a big push by the Polish forces in Italy. But the little people and the little stories had their place in "the rest of the news."

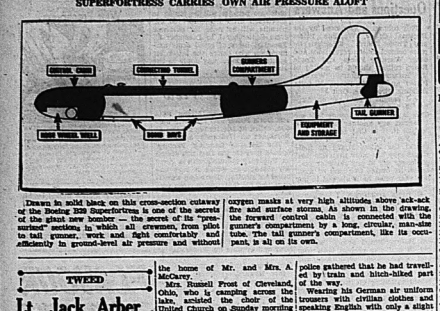
Great Britain's newspapers, as small as they are, still find space to tell their readers what is going on in the country. The gossipy chatter that frequently gets read in full while the headlines are only skimmed, the stories are perused slit in "news."

Here, for instance, were some of the little stories of a day when there was "hottest."

The rector of a Lewes Church was being prosecuted for allegedly refusing to fire-watch. Each parishioner could find a protest with the government that he was supplied with enough sandwiches to feed 5,000 evacuees. Quadruplets were born to a woman in Edinburgh . . .

A looter who stole $7 worth of articles from a bombed house was sentenced to three six months . . . A London widow appeared in court on a witchcraft charge . . . The government was criticized for transporting a German officer prisoner in a first class railway carriage . . .

The wife of an air vice marshal was fined for shoplifting . . . The city of Edinburgh conferred its freedom on Viscount Linlithgow, former viceroy of India . . . There was a rush to adopt a bull, but none could find no takers . . .



And a letter to the editor read:

"The sirens at the Parliament's war 30 yards long, mostly women. The Siren sounded, so I decided to wait for the 'imminent danger' signal to give me a better chance to get out of the shelter roared overhead. Did those women move? Not a bit of it! They sat and I had to wait my proper turn. Carry on, Southern England!"

SUPERFORTRESS CARRIES OWN AIR PRESSURE ALOFT

Drawn in solid black on this cross-section cutaway of the Boeing B29 Superfortress is one of the secrets of the giant new bomber — the secret of its "pressurized" sections in which all crewmen, from pilot to tail gunner, work and fight comfortably and efficiently in ground-level air pressure and without oxygen masks at very high altitudes above ack-ack fire and surface storms. As shown in the drawing, the forward control cabin is connected with the gunner's compartment by a long, circular, man-size tube. The tail gunner's compartment, like its occupant, is all on its own.

Brosig's Flight For Freedom Short-Lived

Cochrane, Aug. 23—(CP)— Finis was marked on Eckhert Brosig's fourth attempt to escape from a prisoner-of-war camp when the escape artist was picked up the next day by Mounties on Jump Tuesday night after his break for freedom from a camp at McGillivray Rat, Alta., sometime between 2 p.m. Sunday and 2 p.m. Monday.

Brosig's short-lived flight for freedom—No. 4 in his two years in Canadian prisons, all of which he was picked up at ? Abitibi ferry about eight miles east of here. Brosig did not say how he had managed to reach the district so quickly, but from the story he told police gathered that he had travelled by train and hitch-hiked part of the way.

Wearing his German air uniform trousers with civilian clothes and speaking English with only a slight trace of an accent, Brosig told police he was from Brazil and was in Canada to study airplane service. He said he had been injured in a crash on the west coast and after receiving hospital treatment at Spokane, Wash., returned to Canada and was on his way to Montreal.

He had a registration certificate, discharge papers from the Spokane Hospital and other papers which appeared to confirm his story of his identity. He carried plenty of money and appeared to have a thorough knowledge of Canada.

Brosig's three previous escapes were from the Monteith Camp.

FOREST FIRE HELD IN CHECK NEAR CITY OF MONCTON

Nearly 1,000 Troops, Airmen Assist Civilians to Keep Fire Away

Moncton, N. B., Aug. 23—(CP)— A forest fire visible from the western outskirts of Moncton continued to be held in check today after more soldiers arrived to patrol the area. More than 1,000 troops and airmen were helping civilian volunteers to keep the fire away from the city.

Generally improved conditions reduced the number of active fire areas in the province to three—near Moncton, at the headwaters of the Nipisiguit River in Northern New Brunswick and in the Shadow Lake district 18 miles from Saint John.

Little wind helped to gain a larger measure of control over the fire near Moncton. It was confined yesterday to the area burned Monday, and heavy thunderstorms this morning brought further relief. The situation remained largely dependent upon weather.

The fire covered about 15 square miles—an area two and a half miles long and two miles wide. Bulldozers cut swaths between this section and the city limits, providing a new defensive area as well as separating parts of the fire zone and enabling easier control.

Elsewhere in the province forest fires were reported under control.

Allied Landing Near Bordeaux Is Reported

London, Aug. 23 (AP)—A new Allied landing near Bordeaux in the southwest coast of France was reported early today in apparently well-substantiated advices from the Spanish frontier, but hours later Allied Supreme Headquarters still declined to confirm or deny the report.

A dispatch written in Hendaye, France, by Charles S. Polis, chief of the Associated Press Madrid Bureau who crossed the border into southern France after the Germans had evacuated frontier posts, quoted French military authorities as saying the landing was begun Tuesday night under cover of a naval and air bombardment.

The operation, the French officials said, was co-ordinated with a ground attack by American and French forces now effected a junction at noon yesterday on the outskirts of Bordeaux.

The newly-liberated Allied planes have paved the way for the landing with a low level attack and that Allied warships had poured shells into Bordeaux for more than an hour.

The American troops participating in the assault from the landward side of the city were said to have driven southward from the Garonne river, 170 miles to the north, while the French were described as a well armed division of volunteers which left Hendaye yesterday.

Clearly Authentic

Polis, who filed his dispatch through Spain after returning to the border, said explosions which sounded like an intense aerial and naval bombment in the Bordeaux area were clearly audible in the Irun-Hendaye frontier region.

Radio France at Algiers said French forces in the interior had occupied Perpignan and that three Allied planes already have landed there to establish contact with the French Patriots. Perpignan is eight miles inland from the Mediterranean coast and 15 miles north of the Spanish border.

In response to queries concerning the reported landing a spokesman at Allied Supreme Headquarters said the French announcement was "outside our province" and declined further comment. The War Department Public Relations Office in Washington said it had no information on a new landing.

Bordeaux, a city of 260,000 situated at the mouth of the Gironde river 110 miles north of the Spanish frontier, apparently is the last port of organized German resistance in southwestern France.

The city was the seat of the Reynaud government at the time of the French collapse in June, 1940, and it was there that the decision was made to sign an armistice with Germany.

Halmahera Hit With 245 Tons By U.S. Bombers

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific, Aug. 23. (AP)—Unchallenged heavy and medium bombers have poured 245 tons of bombs on Halmahera, last island barrier between Allied southwest Pacific forces and the Philippines, during two days. A record 135-ton bombing, which destroyed eight parked planes, supply dumps and defence positions and sank a freighter, was reported today against that octopus-shaped Japanese base. A 110-ton strike has been announced yesterday.

Considering Halmahera's topography — much of its 6,700 square miles are unexplored jungle wilds and only a few coastal sectors are of military use—these are mighty blows.

They are being stepped up more than a week after its airfields were rendered useless to the enemy and its garrison has been weakened by continuous sinkings of small ships trying to sneak down with supplies from the Philippines.

Other air blows by planes based in the Marshalls and Marianas and extending over 90,000 square miles of ocean were reported from Pearl Harbor yesterday.

South England Heavily Hit By Robot Bombs

London, Aug. 23—(CP)— South England today suffered its heaviest dawn barrage of flying bombs yet, as Allied armies beat toward the launching platforms in the Pas-de-Calais area beyond the Seine.

The robots came so fast that gunners had no respite in throwing up a terrific curtain of ground fire. Clouds of smoke over the sea indicated the number of bombs brought down in the channel. Others were heard exploding alott.

The anti-aircraft fire was the heaviest yet heard—a continuous roar of a thunderstorm along the coast.

One bumbomb after being hit shot upward above a town leaving a trail of smoke. It then dived into land in a wide circle before crashing.

A number of casualities, including some deaths, were reported, mostly from bombs striking residential sections.

Russian Troops Reach Beaches Of Riga Says Berlin

London, Aug. 23—(CP)— Russian troops have reached the beaches of Riga, Latvian seaport and capital, the Berlin reported today in an official D.N.B. dispatch.

Riga, largest city in the Baltic states with 385,000 population, has been virtually besieged for a month or more.

Russian troops pushed a 10-mile-wide corridor to the Baltic 25 miles west of Riga some weeks ago, but on Monday the Germans said the corridor had been snapped and communications re-established with the German 16th and 18th armies, estimated in number up to 30 divisions of perhaps 300,000 men.

Four Russian army groups awfully cleaning up. Estonia and Latvia and Lithuania have been pressing steadily upon Riga for weeks. Early this week, Red columns were reported within 18 to 20 miles south, 16 miles east and southeast.

If the Riga beaches have indeed been reached, another trap has been sprung on the bulk of German troops still in the Baltic states.

Fashion Flashes

MORE HAT with more trimmings is the millinery keynote. Velvet makes a big showing in brown lifted for back height. It is trimmed with huge taupe velvet roses and green foliage, and a beige veil is draped over the brim.

A SOUND INVESTMENT for the girl who goes in for plenty of skirts and blouses, or sweaters, is a really good looking skirt of navy or brown, in wool tweed trimmed with white kid and used for a smart model, especially nice when teamed up with a skirt in matching plaid.

ALMOST identical with sheared beaver, but far less costly, is wallaby, a member of the marsupial family. It has the almost the same texture as sheared beaver and when dyed mink boasts the silvery stripes peculiar to this fur.

SMART in whatever size it is shown is a basic crepe dress with square neckline, and side closing all the way down to the hem in tiny crystal buttons. The side closing is emphasized by tiny satin ruffles that cascade from neck to hem.

ARE YOU AN ADDICT to the overblouse? If so, you'll note that this blouse is very popular again. A nice model is cut on long torso lines, is of black crepe with black and gold embroidery at the cross slashed neckline and at either side of the hipline.

PLENTY OF COLOR in the autumn street scene, judging by the applause for brightly colored woolens for coats and suits. Green has can beauty woolen with lavish tuxedo stoles of gray for makes a truly handsome coat.

An arrangement such as a wooden bowl filled with scraps of fruit makes a handy tool for cleaning dusty fruit jars.

3. The bride takes her father's right arm.

4. When you introduce your fiance to your friends, introduce him by his first name . . "Mary, this is my fiance, John Smith." Or—"Mary, Allen, my fiance, John Smith."

6. Yes. Even though the gifts arrive late, write the bride a short note as soon as you receive them. Such a reasonable time is the day after, a member of the bride's family writes to tell them that the gift arrived just fine. Never forget to write bride and groom departed for their wedding trip, but that the bride will write her thanks as soon as possible.

A Young Lady's Birthday

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Every next month I am going to have a small party to celebrate my fifteenth birthday. I'm going to invite only four or five other girls, to come about four o'clock, and then evening I am going to take them to a show. Would you please suggest how I could make it different to them? May I use the stage paper I have with flowers? And may the invitations be typewritten? (The party is to be given before my birthday, since I'll be away on my birthday.)

—T. E. C.

Since you are inviting so very few guests, it isn't necessary to send invitations (you may properly invite them by telephone, or verbally as you see them). However, if you wish you may write notes (the semi-note paper I have with a suitable border for these) reading somewhat like this. Miss Thelma E. Cox

You will make Mother and me very happy if you will come to a party at our home on Saturday, the 14th of August, at four o'clock. Do say "yes."

Affectionately,

(Write your initials—not your full name.) It is not proper to type an invitation.)

GOOD MANNERS

Some Notes for a Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. After my wedding, which will be in the morning, my parents will have a small reception for us. What would you suggest for them?

2. When I show my wedding presents, should I remove the cards?

3. When we walk up the aisle in church, do I take my father's right or left arm?

4. My fiance is a lieutenant, and he is going to have his friends stand away in the army, very few of my friends know him. When I introduce him should I say, "John Smith," or "Lieutenant Smith"?

5. What is the proper alignment ring, is it proper for my brother to congratulate my fiance?

6. If some of my wedding gifts arrive at the last minute, should I write my thank-you letters while I am on my wedding journey?

—BERTHA.

RATIONING TO CONTINUE

Lake Coushiching, Ont., Aug. 23 (CP)—Richard Mills, a member of the economic staff of the British Embassy at Washington, D.C., yesterday told the annual conference of the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs, what war's ravages would mean in bread and butter terms for the British people after the war. He predicted continuation of rationing and wartime controls.

The Marry-Go-Round

CAN YOU DRAMATIZE MARRIAGE?

A woman philosopher has suggested that you should dramatize your love-affair or your marriage. You should stage scenes for it, to make it more effective and interesting.

Give it color and life and variety. It is not the storms of married life which lead to bachelor's. It is the deadly calm of monotony to which he runs to cover and cries for help.

And don't all of us know married people who lead dull, colorless lives, nothing to excite them except the thought for what they'll have for dinner, or of the dress the new roll will be over?

Still, I repeat, if you can dramatize marriage, unless you are one of those rare individuals who are born the dramatic type, and seem to stage-manage their whole lives. Those subtle women with what is called "flare."

"Have something new or different to suggest, something to surprise a man with, every day," says this philosopher, "even if it's only a new way of doing your hair or a new arrangement in the furniture. Never let life get monotonous. Use the dramatic in the terrace or under a tree—once in a while, but don't make home tired and tired. Invite new and interesting people to dinner. Don't always be in the same mood.

In other words, make life a vaudeville show, full of surprise and variety and the Big Boy will never come and leave you! Oh, woe!

No doubt that excellent philosophy does work in a love-affair or even during an engagement. Don't let him get bored. But once you've landed him. And a few surprises will have taken too many evenings spent in dancing at night-clubs or cooing on the porch glider.

I can't remember how, if stage-managed my own romances—I've been too long married. But I remember, if my husband came home one evening and found me sitting at the piano, play and sing a long bob, and the next night found me sitting on the floor in "dinner-rolls", and trailing a sophisticated black lace gown, he'd have had a call in an alienist.

And if I dared to re-arrange the furniture every other week, I'd have lamp or moved his favorite armchair into the hall. Or I'd stick a glittering eye and pull them right back again. Men are creatures of habit. They get accustomed to seeing certain things in certain places; and they want to find them there every time. They don't like surprises.

Even my greeting my husband warmly one night and frigidly the next—but wouldn't be improved with my dramatic effects. He'd only say, "What's eating you?" and that's eating you!", and go in and take his shower, come out, light his pipe and get all set for the far end of the piazza and read his paper.

Perhaps the best suggestion for me—it would be "curtains!"

FLAVOUR BAKED BEANS AND BACON EGGS WITH HP SAUCE

BEAUTY By Helen Jameson

MID-SEASON COIFFURES

It's a funny thing! A woman's hair can be a source of ecstatic delight or frantic distraction, She may love it or hate it. She may have an amiable nature, or it may snarl at her when she so much as touches it. If there is a friendly bond between a woman and her wavy or big glory, it is in luck. When a woman says that she can't do a thing with her hair, she may be right; it just won't let her.

We are now entering into a cut-again-grow-again era. The cropped lady suddenly realizes that mane-hunting time. She endures the growing period when it is neither fish or fowl, but a mere straggly and-between. Finally she has enough hair material to make a respitty hair do. She feels that she looks years older. She tires of the smooth pomp and the straight rear arrangement, then snip—she is a short lady. She returns to the three inch cut, looks cherubic, but finds that the discontent wave overhead is something terrible. When you don't want to grow it, you do. Now you are waiting for it to extend itself, it takes forever to do it.

Now we have the shorties and the longies. Locks are being arranged with sleek formality or can be curried within an inch of their lives. Each style lattitude was never enjoyed in the past.

The high school girl—whose creed is, and ever was, to look precisely like every other girl, wears her hair in a soft, narrow pompadour, and looks flowing in a careless mane. Since wheedling for money for permanents does not bring forth results, tress ends are done up on curlers every night. Mom's nursing interferes with sleep when one is young, but it must be a tiresome task when the hour is late and the sandman is lingering near.

Bangs, which for many many days are but a memory, individual hairs, are coming back. At the point of the unusual. Slashed bangs, bangs set back, are in favor. A new fashion, favored by women whose jobs keep them busy at the typewriter, is to have bangs claim their attention in the evening. They are middle parted and smooth and slick, locks of shoulder length at the back, ends curled under. A ribbon band is worn. The effect is not as severe as it sounds, and adds prettiness to the face, gives an air of distinction.

Hair ornaments are many different arrangements that one develops readily for the slightly clever who have no end of offerings. They still assume that a permanent is necessary, even when a smooth pompadour is worn, as it gives more body to the hair and helps to control it.

The parted swirl at the back stays popular with the older women. It makes for a neat neckline, has dignity about it.

Marmora and District

Annual Decoration Day Observed By Canadian Legion

Marmora, Aug. 21. — Beautiful weather prevailed for the holding of the annual Decoration Day services under the auspices of Marmora Branch No 257 Canadian Legion on Sunday afternoon. The color party and color sergeants were present from Campbellford, Hastings and Prince Edward Scores. The Hospital Band was also in attendance under Lieut. Floyd Kidd.

President T. Pritchard was in charge of the parade which fell in at the Memorial Hall. Wreaths were placed at the base of the memorial tablets by Comrade Harold Nayler for the fallen in the last war, and by Corporal Pearce Shea, of the C.W.A.C. for the fallen in the present war. Last Post was sounded by Comrade G. Brooks followed by two minutes silence and reveille.

The parade then went to the Public School grounds where a service of remembrance was held. Rev. Capt. D. M. Cadigan, who was in charge called upon Rheeve W. S. Linn to address the gathering. W. J. Cottrell, Legion padre, then took the Invocation prayer and Rev. J. Stephenson, of the Marmora Pentecostal church, then read the Scripture Lesson. Prayers followed by giving, Supplication and Intercession were next taken by W. J. Cottrell. The Address was delivered by Capt. Cadigan, who chose as his text: "I came to look upon the Pharoah let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines although that was nearest," the preacher ingenuity drew a comparison between the journeying of the Children of Israel to the promised land and the advance of the Allies cause of freedom in the world these past thirty years. When realisation looked that God has said "Not yet", but nevertheless it guided His people just the same. Capt. Cadigan also said Christ was also tempted to make the leap from the pinnacle in the temple, the expedite the conquest of man's hearts, but instead chose to go through the wilderness and to accept the Way of the Cross. God has many ways to bring the wilderness today, but there is His Guiding Hand-for us to accept".

The service concluded with the National Anthem and the Benediction. The parade then proceeded to the Sacred Heart Cemetery, where another "Last Post" comrade, as in the other cemetery, had been marked with small Union Jacks and a floral tribute. Rev. Welcomed the Legion in a very fitting address, commending the organization for their work keeping the memory of departed comrades fresh in each year. He dwelt upon the link between the dead and said the supreme sacrifice in this war and the last.

Following prayers, Comrade Pritchard read the list of names whose graves were decorated by the various members and the service concluded with a benediction. Buglers, Comrade Pritchard read the list of names whose graves were decorated by the various members and the service concluded with a benediction. Buglers, Comrade Pritchard read the list of names whose graves were decorated by the various members and the service concluded with a benediction. Buglers, were again sounded by Comrade G. Brooks and a two minutes silence observed.

The parade continued to Marmora Pioneer Cemetery, where the same procedure of decoration was followed. Rev. Cadigan also gave a short address on the rededication of surviving comrades to the cause which has dominated the hearts of all. Col. G. W. Yates commanding officer of the Hastings and Prince Edward Reserve Regiment, then joined with the Legion in honoring those who were part of a choir at this year's camp, in the rendition of "The Old Rugged Cross". Capt. Cadigan also offered a prayer. While the graves were being decorated the band played "Land Kindly Light". Returning to the Memorial Hall, the parade passed through the principal streets. Before dismissal, President Pritchard and Col. Yates thanked all for their co-operation in making the parade so inspiring and so successful. Visiting legionnaires and the Band were later served refreshments by the ladies auxiliary of the Canadian Legion in the Council Chamber.

Dinosaurs Mined As Well As Coal in Alberta Town

By JAMES McCOOK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Drumheller, Alta.—(CP)— Coal-mining area this Alberta city its life and vigour but mining coal is only a way of makin' a living. But mining for dinosaurs—that's something else again.

For this is the badlands, and Drumheller says "badlands" proudly. Along the dark valley of the red deer rise strange rock formations, petrified wood, boodoos—thin tall pinnacles of stone—and the stark walls of deep canyons.

Here lie the bones of 100,000,000 years, bones that the first settlers cleared from their land like rocks, growing over the edge of the "badlands" they thought must have died on their homesteads. But then, in the 90's came scientists who looked at the bones and flittered with excitement. For the valley is a treasure house of prehistoric remains from which the bones of dinosaurs and all their fantastic kin have been sent to the greatest museums in the world.

And so, in Drumheller, they say that mines are busy and they hope all Canadians will buy their winter fuel supplies in good time. Then, without delay, they begin talking of the dinosaurs. The board of trade has car stickers with dinosaur motif, and seller with the picture of a strange monster. There are booklets showing nightmare creatures locked in cromlech and maps of the dinosaur park where you still can see bones littering the ground.

Park Area Foreseen

Drumheller has high hopes for federal and provincial assistance in developing a great park area along the river. There the tourists will come and see the remnants of life's early remote ages. The city advertises itself as the "Hidden City of the West." Gateway to the Badlands, a paradise for the geologist, paleontologist or miner-tourist.

They tell the story of Dan McCee, a farmer six miles west of Drumheller, who used to walk over a chunk of bone 100 yards from his shack. To him it was just another bone, but it might as well have been the Hope diamond as far as scientific value was concerned. That piece of bone belonged to a duck-billed dinosaur and in 1913 the full skeleton was uncovered by Charles Sternberg, leader of an expedition from the federal mines department. The skeleton, now mounted at the National Museum in Ottawa, is 21 feet long.

There's bones in them thar hills," say Drumheller people, using the latest geology to describe anything fossil. They say that in peace-time the business of hunting bones—the big car stickers call them "bones"—and seller with the picture of a strange monster. There are booklets showing nightmare creatures locked in cromlech and maps of the dinosaur park where you still can see bones littering the ground.

GIRL FOREST FIRE FIGHTERS REPLACE MEN IN SERVICES

Thousands Join United States Forest Service to Help Combat Outbreaks in Their Home-Town Areas

By ROBERT E. GAIGER
Associated Press Writer

Hughes Gulch Colo.—(CP)— Tall, slim ribbon clerks and red-headed stenographers, too — make good forest fire fighters.

The United States Forest Service is recruiting thousands of them for one of the toughest home-front jobs going.

They will take the places of the seasoned forest rangers and paid fire fighters now with the armed services. They work under Forest and civilian defence officials and sheriffs.

They are a fast-action, front-line dies -organization. Employed mostly in small towns as civilian jobs, they are willing to drop whatever they are doing and speed to a forest fire at a moment's notice.

"If it wasn't for those volunteers a fire might get started and burn a forest to the ground," says C. E. Collins, acting supervisor of Roosevelt National Forest.

Forest fire danger was multiplied by war. Officials realized the enemy might send incendiary bombers against woodlands. West coast fires were particularly vulnerable. Quickly new methods were developed for fighting fires with inexperienced crews.

The fighting may number from six or seven to 2,000 or more, dependent upon the size of the blaze.

Formerly they were linked in one vast team. Now the system has been broken down so that the individual is the important unit, although he still is part of a team ready for his own protection.

Under the old method, if one man or one crew dropped out from a fire fighting team, because of exhaustion or injury, he left a gap. In addition the entire crew had to be paced by its slowest, or weakest, member.

Fighters Are "Buddies"

Now the forest service uses the "buddy system" in which two men work as a team. If one fire fighter becomes lost, ill or exhausted, his buddy reports it immediately.

If one man drops out, it does not slow the entire crew. Another two-man team moves in and fills the gap in the line.

The volunteer fire fighters, who soon grow to love the smell of smoke, are given an intensive schooling. First they study fire-fighting principles and then the tools.

In a "graduation" exercise, Collins showed a flame thrower at a clump of dry, diseased pines. Under them was the thick floor of dry grass, pine needles and dead branches. A stiff breeze was blowing. The flame shot upward. The crew of stenographers, housewives, judges, clerks and bankers went to work.

Almost as fast as they could walk they grubbed out a "line" a foot wide through the floor of pine needles and grass, leaving solid earth. It extended in a quarter-mile circle around the blaze. Backfires were set around the circle, burning back all grass, within the flaming circle, toward the main blaze. When the flames reached this line they burned out.

Actually officials say, girls would be used to man the emergency communication lines, cook and perform other light jobs around a big fire. They would be needed to turn into full-fledged smoke eaters. But the girls are willing.

Name of Canada Will Live Forever in Ariella Area

By BILL BOSS
(C.P. War Correspondent)

Pescara, Italy (CP) — For a long, long time, last December and into this year, this town of Pescara was on the front of the Canadians. Until German parachutists threw a wrench into their plans in December, it was part of the plan that they be here sometime in January. That done, Rome was expected to fall quickly because the highway between Pescara and Rome would be available for exploitation.

But the fates ruled otherwise. The front bogged down for the winter for months on end until there was added to their plans in the area as we who didn't know the Ariell fairytimes liked the back of his hand. They shelled Francavilla, Tollo and Mafalanico, Orsogna and Arielli-Crognale, sent patrols into Crecchio, they did everything but move into those places for keeps.

That job was left for the Poles, who took over from the Indian formations which relieved the Canadians in the spring.

It has been an uncanny experience to go over a land saturated with Canadian interest, yet for the liberation of which, men of another land are credited.

Bridges and diversions built by Canadian engineers between Tollo and Francavilla and Orsogna and nearly all in the process of being replaced by permanent structures. Across the River Moro other Canadian engineers and members of a Canadian graves registration unit have surveyed out the Canadian military cemetery and erected bodies of men who fell in the battles of the Sangro, for their bodies also are being interred in the burial ground.

Rebuild Orsina

Orsina houses in her ruins 18,000 people, more than ever did in peacetime. Shell-torn homes are being made habitable, rubble continues to disappear, but it will take years for the rebuilding program now under way to be completed.

A few weeks ago the name of Ian Sinclair was unto all Canadian tradition. Every year in mid-July the town recalls that day in the cathedral of St. Thomas commemorates the doubting disciple. A silver casket containing relics and a silver replica of the saint's head is carried in procession. Italian Germans were mining the cathedral last November when the fuse of the spirit, the parish priest made his way into the chapel and rescued the relics. Canadian soldiers meanwhile carried on the fight with the Nazis, eventually clearing them from the town.

This year special prayers for the Canadians who died in the liberation of Orsina were included in ceremonies in the badly-damaged church and they will be repeated annually in the future.

From the heavily-mined farmlands of the Sangro valley, last winter's No Man's Land, casualties are flowing into Orsina at the rate of seven a day—more civilians today than there were battle casualties during the months in which the war settled down there temporarily.

In the little civilian hospital of Dr. Mario Turturro, former professor of surgery at Naples University, beds are at a premium.

Only Civilian Doctor

The doctor, the civilian practitioner in the town, carries on from daylight till dark assisted by a little group of nuns who nurse his wounded and help at his operations which number as many as 50 a day and once, even 15, a day. Once in a while an army doctor, Polish or British, as the case may be, with time on his hands, drops in to see what he can do to help, but for the main the professor is alone.

The bulk of the casualties are farmers who have returned to their farms, but in tilling their lands are mines by the thousands. The warned, the peasant doesn't want to, or can't wait for the Germans' moving Italian army to clear his land for him. Polish and British troops are too busy operationally to help.

A farmer may plow one, two or three furrows and get away with it. But inevitably he hits a spot, a buried area and before he realizes it, his oxen and plow have been blown up and he is hurt, more or less seriously. Italian women working in the fields with their men, number evenly with the menfolk among the casualties.

Ortona may not be shelled today, but war in passing on has left a sting that is proving more costly in Italian life now than when it raged in her streets.

Bodies Await Burial

The Valley of the Ariell recalls that long, hard fight, when around this area of the January 17th, attack by the 2nd Canadian Infantry Brigade, the Cape Breton Highlanders are still the bodies of many Canadian dead. Their graves are hastily interred and for the moment, anyway, unidentified.

Francavilla along the road a bit, has obviously been touched by war, but many more have been worse violated. Pescara is virtually intact. Bridges and installations are out, of course, as are the staples, marshalling yards, water and light plants. But the homes, schools and public buildings still stand.

Well, that's one road the Canadians were going to take to Rome, the coast road. They were going to take it anyway. It runs inland by way of Villa Grande, San Nicola, Tollo, Miglianico and Chieti. Villa Grande had "had it" long ago. Canadians who left it last spring, remember its destruction, would find it even less distinct a town now.

But worse than Villa Grande is Tollo. Tollo is Italy's unsung Cassino. Tollo tells that Canadians, too, knows how to wage total war. Perhaps every type of gun ever manned by a Canadian, or ever under Canadian command, has been fired at Tollo. A whole sck-ack regiment, a whole regiment of tanks, had got at this hilltop town with the rest. One memorable day last December 5th, Princess Louise's New Brunswick Hussars, an armored unit, wheeled every tank in the regiment on a ridge overlooking the town and in a concentrated shoot, pumped 1,100 rounds of shells into it within two minutes. Tollo was then an entire sck-ack regiment shot it up with air-burst shells.

Chieti is dramatic in contrast. If Tollo is the Adriatic's Cassino, Chieti is cathedral town, is the Adriatic's Rome. Capital of Chieti province, seat of DNAI Archdiocese, this hill-top city has been absolutely spared the carnage of war. The cathedral is there and only one on the Adriatic side north of Rome.

And so the road winds down the hill to join up with the Via Tiburtina, the link-up between Pescara and Rome, where but for a lot of luck and hard work by Canadian and German parachutists, the Canadians in May might have been able to make possible the fall of Rome last winter.

INTEREST TAKEN IN FAMILY WOES OF SERVICEMEN

Little-Heard-of Section of Federal Agency Keeps Home Fires Burning for Canadians Overseas

By HELEN RANDEREMAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, (CP)—Keeping the home fires burning for the overseas fighting man may seem a trifle unrealistic in the daily work of an unsung section under the Dependents' Allowances Board government agency which sees that Pte. Johnny Canuck's next-of-kin is cared for while he is away.

The Family Welfare Section, described by chief Miss Ruth Harvey of Westmount, Que., as the "liaison office between the fighting front and rest of Canada," has the job of ferreting out difficulties in the servicemen's family and sending him detailed reports of its work.

"The Board and its sections here at the Records Building have a great task to perform in keeping morale and they do far more than that," Miss Harvey told The Canadian Press. "We think it's a pretty big war job."

Her desk, constantly piled with reports and files in which red "Urgent" cards are clipped, shows a cross-section of the thousands of letters from servicemen asking the Board's help in domestic entanglements. Its branch social service agencies reporting on what they have been able to accomplish. In such cases, and letters Miss Harvey has one of her staffers read aloud, giving full reports to servicemen overseas.

Typical Case

The case of Mrs. H. was in front of Miss Harvey's desk. Mrs. H. Called in by a worried soldier in Italy to Canada in which Mrs. H. lived. Through one of Canada's receivedsocial service agencies and it was found necessary to administer her allowance until she could get on her feet. Mrs. H. was to report and in part:

Her family's living conditions have improved from one room in a boarding house to a three-room rooming-house to a five-roomed modern bungalow. Their home has been completely furnished. Mrs. H. has more incentive to keep her home looking attractive as the family diet has improved and the children look better."

From we took over the administration there were more than 2,000 cases, the amountable to $45.50."

Red Cross meetings are still being held each Tuesday afternoon in the work rooms but the attendance during the summer months has been exceedingly small. It is hoped, however, that with the cooler days approaching the ladies of the town and district will get their way clear to give at least one half day per week to this important work.

One excellent donation was, however, received on Tuesday from an ardent worker who several times a year sends in a like donation. This latest one included several articles of finely knitted babies' wear, sweaters, sox and other garments for boys and girls.

A large bouquet of gladioli donated on Tuesday by Mrs. Ackerman was raffled and won by Mrs. W. Bain.

ST. LOUIS BROWNS LIMP HOME WITH 4½-GAME LEAD

Niggeling Blanks Senators as Browns End Trip With 7 Wins in 16 Games

PIRATES RUSHING

By JACK HAND
Associated Press Sport Writer

Buoyed by the return of their big guns from the invalid list, eastern invasion with a slight limp and new respect for the Pittsburgh Pirates A's and Washington Senators, the league-leading St. Louis Browns headed home via Detroit and Cleveland today bolstered by a 4 1-2-game lead.

Johnny Niggeling blanked the Brownies last night in Washington, 2-0, as the Lake Erwell men wound up their trip with only seven wins in 16 games. A scrap between Mike Potter and George Case toughened off a free-for-all during the play-off in the seventh inning.

Boston fell before Cleveland again, 5-4, while Steve Gromek outsteadied the wild Emmett O'Neill. Detroit, the western club with the best record in the east, slid down below the New Yorkers into third place, 9-7 at the Motor Stadium. Hal Newhouser failed in his search for win No. 21, losing to Dizzy Trout. Queen who needed a parade to relief help to hold the edge.

Russ Christopher took his seventh straight, the longest streak of the year in the Americas, when he bested Philadelphia to a 5-1 victory over Chicago's Johnny Rigney.

Pittsburgh continued to rush Washington in but futile pursuit of the Cardinals. The Pirates trimmed Washington, 7-6, for their fifth win in the last 18 games, but St. Louis, the defending champions, upped the ante to 17 games by twice trimming Boston 7-4 and 3-1. Harry Brecheen knocked his 15th triumph at Jim Tobin's expense and Max Lanier outpointed Jim Wilson in a one-hitter, a scratch single off Whitey Kurowski's glove by Butch Nieman in the first inning.

Cincinnati split with the Phils on Tom Dekdebrun's 5-1 job in the second game after Ron Northey's 15th homer gave Bill Lee a 5-4 win in the first. New York copped the season series from Brooklyn by winning 9 to 8 in a victory with the Cubs threatening until the very end.

New York, Aug. 21 —(AP)— One Saturday afternoon football coaches in his first task every morning is to "check the hotels to see who is in town." Then it is to "find out our players away from them." . . . Maybe a slight exaggeration, but this corner's spy in that territory reports a "regular epidemic of football coaches." . . . Unless the Yankees come through with a last-minute miracle, there will be an eighth in 24 years that no New York team has won 20 games. This is the last stretch 22 Gotham clubs have appeared in the series . . . .

Oscar Judd, Ingersoll Hurler, Is Granted Leave of Absence

By The Canadian Press

After lasting only three innings in Monday's International League fixture with Cleveland, Oscar Judd, pitcher of Boston Red Sox and product of Ingersoll, Ont., has been granted leave of absence and has retired for the balance of the season, it was announced yesterday by General Manager Eddie Collins in Boston. Judd has been troubled with a sore arm and his record for the year was one victory and five loss, his previous appearance on the mound having been in June.

Only 26 of 384 amateur entrants and 25 of 46 women yesterday qualified for 72-hole medal play in their respective divisions of the Tam O'Shanter all-American Golf tourney at Chicago, one of the eliminated Edmonton lassies being Ruth Gilbert of Windsor with a 77, two strokes more than permitted.

The $1,500 Ticonderoga stakes for three-year-old trotters featuring the grand circuit card at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., last night went to the top row, owned by E. A. Tassi, San Jose, Calif. He won the first heat in 2:10 and was second in the next dash.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

Toronto, Aug. 23—(CP)—You can chalk up another scientific credit for the war anyway—it's making big-time sport and big-time sport promoters much more appreciative of the past, the amateur game and the small fry play in their schools of existence.

There was a time when good material was plentiful as all get-out in any sport you could mention, and it was always there for the asking. But now that manpower is so shy, the professional and top amateur organizations have to dig keep for player fodder.

It's encouraging to see a move like that made by Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League, whose interest in the small fry is taking the shape of a special all-stars professional Amateur Baseball contest tonight. The Toronto Baseball Association is providing the opposition, and the boys have been getting a lot of practice in the Leafs' Park and pointers from the players themselves. Then the game proceeds that will be turned over to the amateurs will help them on their way financially.

It's a good move, and one that will pay dividends in future, if it is repeated at not-too-infrequent intervals. The big-time football game out in Winnipeg found it a profitable venture in terms of player returns when they asked Minnipeg to coach and encourage the youngsters in the Manitoba capital to greater play. Every spade-work done in that direction won't be regretted when it comes time to harvest the crop in future years.

Tactiurn Phil:

Elmer Ferguson reports in the Montreal Herald that Phil Watson, loquacious ice artist with Montreal's Les Canadiens last winter, is writhing in agony keeping himself silent as the Canucks' summer training trends toward its schedule. Phil says he is saving all his wisecracks for the time when he hopes to talk at least 20 players into the penalty box early in the season. If he doesn't burst before then, Phil really should be full of caustic-reddening suggestions.

Incidentally:

Edmonton Schoolgirl Edith Skitch is a claimant for a share in the $1,000 purse for 80 metres intermediate hurdles record. In a recent meet she stepped the distance in 12 seconds, equalling Hamiltonian Betty Taylor's 1931 record. They're marked up another one for the record books at Fredericton. They had to call a baseball game there when forest fires sweeping the New Brunswick woods poured a pall of gloom over the diamond in the fifth inning.

Sport Shorts From Britain

By ALLAN NICKLSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 22. (CP)—A figure well known in Britain's dog-racing circles was sentenced at Leeds to six months in prison and fined $675 for attempting to induce two trainers to give drugs to three of his own greyhounds.

John Hay, 53-year-old importer of greyhounds from Ireland who was described as being widely-known and respected throughout the sport pleaded guilty. It was pointed out that by convention he would be barred from tracks for life.

The prosecution, related an instance in which Hay gave a fleet-footed trainer £1 and asked him to drug a dog which was entered in a race. The trainer told an authority.

The judge, in summing up, said Hay had "paid money so that dishonesty might enter into the conduct of a perfectly fair and legitimate sport. He should have been the last to do so, particularly as he was a so-called sport of dog-racing".

Big-time rugby between teams representing England, Scotland Wales, South Africa, and New Zealand, on the newly-laid turf of the El Alamein Club in Cairo, has been a popular attraction for Middle East troops.

The informant is Lt.-Col. Kenyon Jones, Wales, Oxford and Cardiff and Welsh rugby forward, back in England after nearly five years overseas.

At one time Jones was reported missing in Greece along with the other London Welsh players, Lieut. Gen. Sir Wilson Hudd, Inspector-at-three-quarter, and Sgt.-Maj C. R. Owen, Welsh trial back and Arnold Brown, who had been playing for the Welsh Exiles, a club formed in Cairo, until the Nazis came.

RANOMA'S STARS WIN WAR HONORS

Kenora, Ont., Aug. 23, (AP)—Kenora Thistles, many times champions in peacetime but now in producing more important champions, have won war honors.

Take Kenora Thistles, for instance. Their hockey team brought its picturesque Lake of the Woods style to the Canadian Amateur hockey championship in 1940. Now most of the members are in the army or in uniforms scattered over many parts of the globe.

Pfc. Lin Hanton, a high-scoring forward on the 1940 Thistles recently was awarded the D.F.M. and the United States star for gallantry in action. Cpl. Cliff Brooks is sweeping over enemy territory. Hanton blew up 19 railway locomotives.

Other Thistles playing their part on world battlefronts are Cpl. Bill Raynor, who later played in the National Hockey League with Brooklyn Americans, Eddie Dartnell, Vic Lofvendahl and Joe Johns. All are in the Canadian Navy.

Performing yeoman work along with Hanton in the R.C.A.F. are Bruce McPherson and Bill Junis. Representatives in the army are Bob Hannaford and Dick Milford, both overseas.

Two farmers had many arguments as to which could grow the best produce. One day one of them sent his son to borrow the other's saw.

"What might he want it for?" the latter asked.

"Well," said he boy, "he's got a cabbage so big he says he'll wait the saw before he can get it into the barrow."

"Go back and tell him he can't have it. I've got it stuck fast in a potato," was the reply.

Any Sponsors?

We received another letter from J. D. Miller, publicity manager of the Peterborough Rugby Association, regarding the possibility of sponsoring a junior O.R.F.U. team in Belleville. When first approached on the subject local football mentors were of the opinion that the proposed age of 21 years in September 1944 was too old in wartime. Apparently other communities are of the same opinion, that is according to Mr. Miller's letter, which reads:

83 James Street,
Peterborough, Ont.,

Dear Sir:

I have been in correspondence with other teams who thought might be interested in forming a district junior football league and they are of the same opinion as you, that the proposed age limit is too high.

We in Peterborough are willing to lower the age limit if it will get us a game. We are anxious to get the game alive among the younger fellows. We are willing to compromise on the age limit, say 19 years or under on Sep. 1st of the playing year, if this will meet with general approval.

Would you please notify me if there are any teams in Belleville willing to play rugby under this ruling?

Signed:
J. D. Miller,
83 James Street,
Peterborough, Ont.

(Incidentally Homer "Red" Townsend, local rugby football maestro and Belle Ewart beats should take advantage of this opportunity. We have a lot of good rugby material in our teen aged boys throughout Belleville. They would give a good account of themselves on the playing field and would also be preparing for the day when they called when the fall classic is bound to return to popular sport prominence all over the Dominion. Personally I'm willing to back anything to get the game alive and give whatever assistance I can towards the promotion of rugby football in Belleville," commented Mr. Townsend.)

Real Smart Game.

According to eye witnesses of Saturday's Belleville-Centennial game at Kingston, Belleville softball fans will get a peek at a smart fielding play this evening. At noon today Manager Max Peoples of Belleville decided to start Ellis Anderson or Jim Hunter against the Shoemakers, who also have another chucker besides Holcombur, who tossed a no-hit, no-run game against Belleville Internationals at three-quarter, and Sgt.-Maj C. R. Owen, Welsh trial back and Arnold Brown, who had been playing for the Welsh Exiles, a club formed in Cairo, until the Nazis came.

"The England" team was captained by Capt. D. L. Drysdale, Rugby center Cambridge and Richmond forward. The South African side was led by Boy Louw, famed Springbok forward.

Soldiers tonight, the Cobawa "red, white and blue" team will be there and stationed at Kingston. . . . Skipper Peoples may make a slight shift in the Belleville infield tonight in order to try and force a third game. . . . Little Jimmy Boyle has been the idol of the youngsters of the Hastings juniors who meet the local Scouts kids in the first game of the O.A.S.A. Eastern Ontario junior playdowns at the Ex Fair grounds on Thursday night. . . . However, in the absence of Coach Jack Scott, Jimmy Boyle has been working the Squires out regularly for the past fortnight and they are ready for Thursday night's test. . . . Incidentally congratulations are in order for Jack Doran, the popular sports director at the St. Michael's Academy having joined the Benedicts last Saturday. . . . Also Thursday night saw the reorganization of the Girls' play-offs at the Armouries.

Remember When.

Bill Cook, Bep Greyhound and Kingston Frontenac fighting winger, turned professional with the Saskatoon edition of the Western Canada League 22 years ago today. . . . Cook, now with the New York Rangers, newly-formed National League entry, in 1926, teaming up with his brother Bun and Frankie Boucher to form one of hockey's greatest lines. . . . Bill Cook to-day this trio is retired, although the Cook's are running the Cleveland Barons. Bill Cook is at present farming near Kingston.

Green Cloth.

When it comes to attracting patrons to the turf, match the villains on the card are equally as important as the act as the horses. Take for instance John Katan and Nanjo Singh, two of the principals in the tonight's wrestling card at the Hume arena. Just which is the more unpopular one of the pair, up the more unorthodox ring measure one was unable to decide, but one thing certain they'll both be trying to out-do each other in this measure.

Night Ball Upheld.

Night baseball, currently the diamond sport's most controversial subject, had a strong champion in the immortal George Sisler, one of the greatest hitters of all time and now a scout for the Brooklyn Dodgers. The former St. Louis Browns and Washington star, passing through here recently, looks upon the nocturnal version of the game favorably to the game.

Bone basehall men, led by Ed Barrow, president of the New York Yankees, label it as America the game, the national pastime, claimed that the late hours necessary to play night baseball keeps youth interest and actually contribute to better citizenship rather than street, as afternoon ball is said to do.

Sisler, who has no tolerance for the lack of control of the Barrow school of thought as having no control himself, "Nonsense," he cinch." George says, "that night baseball is here to stay, and anything that helps attendance helps the game. Besides, it's already here and that's all there is to it."

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 468

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Every so often I get that old feeling. It is that I am looking at a hand with a ten-way stretch; a hand that may be bid in more ways than one.

When I do, I merely stand it up against the basic rules and the correct bid shows up. If Shoes not turn out right, neither would some other bid I might have selected.

Here is a deal from last night:

NORTH
♠ 7 6
♥ 8
♦ 9 8 7 6 3
♣ K Q 10 8
WEST	EAST
♠ K Q 10	♠ J 9 5 3
♥ Q 6 2	♥ 9 4 3
♦ Q 10 5	♦ J 4
♣ Q J 10 6	♣ K 7 5 4
SOUTH
♠ A 8 4 2
♥ A K J 10 5 4 3
♦ A K
♣ A 9

The bidding went like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
2 H	3 NT
3 H	3 NT
4 H	PASS

West started out with an opening lead of the club queen. South trumped it. If a south spade can be trumped by dummy's losing heart, the contract can be made.

So, the declarer led the spade ace and another spade. On the next of spades, west might have put his ten. He would then win the second spade trick with king or queen.

Then, he dare not lead a trump. It would lose a trump trick for his side. But west was a clever defender who anticipated just such a situation.

On the spade ace instead of the ten, he deliberately dropped his king. So, when the second spade was led from south, west played the ten. It was an unblock that east could see.

East was alintive enough to notice the unusual act by west and read its purpose. His partner just meant's ten with the jack and led back a trump, thereby defeating the contract.

Defensive play may seem to be the tops of bridge skills. But with sufficient practice, you may emulate what experts do.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Love Affair's" Sweet!

A romance between two worldly sophisticates develops into one of the screen's sweetest stories in the RKO Radio hit "Love Affair", which co-stars Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer.

Boyer and Miss Dunne meet aboard an ocean liner en route to New York. A Parisian playboy, Boyer is en route to marry an American heiress, while Miss Dunne is returning to her lover in New York after a short visit to Europe. A warm romance suddenly arises, but sacrifices must be made to find the happiness that is rightfully theirs.

Second attraction "Jive Junction" brings the scenes in a new find in Gerry Young, a singing voice to be remembered.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Mr. Muggs Steps Out"
(East Side Kids)

The East Side Kids—Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall and Bobby Jordan—have starred in Monogram's exciting comedy-drama, "Mr. Muggs Steps Out", which opens at the Capitol theatre next. Joan Marsh is the only leading lady, and other supporting roles are held by Noah Beery, Sr., Betty Blythe, Halliwell Hobbs, Billy Benedict, Patsy Moran, Nick Stuart and Eddie Marr. Jean William Beaudine directed the film from an original screen play by Wm. X. Crowley and Barney Sarecky. Producers were Sam Katzman and Jack Dietz.

"Carson City Cyclone"

Don "Red" Barry rides again in his new Republic western "Carson City Cyclone," coming next to the Capitol Theatre as the added thriller. The film features a strong cast in support of Barry, including Lynn Merrick, Noah Berry, Sr., Bryant Washburn, Stuart Hamblen and Emmett Lynn.

A color cartoon and the serial "Captain America" complete the big family bill.

AT THE BELLE

"Up in Arms"

"Up in Arms" Samuel Goldwyn's gigantic technicolor production now on the Belle Theatre screen stars Danny Kaye in a riotous musical comedy of an eccentric draftee who turns the Army upside down. Dinah Shore, Dana Andrews, and Constance Dowling are featured, and the glamorous chorus girls provide the eye-filling ensemble.

Dana Andrews Gets Top Role.

Dana Andrews, who distinguished himself so superbly in "Crash Dive", "The Ox-Bow Incident" and "Up In Arms" has been cast by P. Zanuck's production of "The Purple Heart", the most important role of his film career. The 20th Century-Fox picture is slated to open next at the Belle Theatre.

As Captain Harvey Ross, one of the eight airmen, this role is the most dramatic story of the war in the Pacific. Andrews gives an unforgettable portrayal that typifies the courage and heroism of America.

Others featured in the film which Lewis Milestone directed, are Richard Conte, Farley Granger, Kurt Kreuger, Donald Barry, Trudy Marshall and Sidney Lewis.

Three Swell Featurettes

Three swell featurettes are announced for exhibition on the same program including Walt Disney's color cartoon "Donald Duck and the Gorilla", a beautiful travel film "Switzerland in Technicolor", and a clever novelette "Mailman of Snake River".

Drew Charges Organized Attempt Has Been Made to Misinterpret His Statements on Baby Bonus Bill

Toronto, Aug. 22. (CP)—Premier Drew of Ontario said in a statement issued from his office yesterday that "a well-organized attempt has been made to misinterpret" his statements about the federal government family allowances measure and similar legislation in his radio speech of August 9.

The statement said:

"A well-organized attempt has been made to misinterpret what I said over the radio on Aug. 9 in regard to the baby bonus bill and similar legislation. This has resulted in mis-statements as to what I said being made by men whose sincerity is beyond question and I therefore wish to clarify two particular points in my speech.

The statement has been made that I am opposed to family allowances. Press reports have made that position clear. I can answer that best by quoting the exact words I used in my speech: "We are in favor of every proper step being taken to encourage large and healthy families. We hold in sound provisions for family allowances and social security." Surely those words are not open to misunderstanding.

I am opposed to the plan put forward by the Dominion government which would result in the province of Ontario paying approximately twice as much for family allowances as they would receive.

Would Share Advantages.

In that statement I was equally clear about our willingness to share the burden in the province with other provinces in Canada. Nothing I said will have in no way thought that the financial resources of this province should not stand behind every legitimate measure for the assistance of any part of Canada which is in need of help. We want to take our full share in building a powerful and prosperous nation".

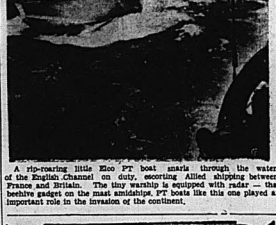
It has been stated that my speech did not recognize the advantages we gain by having head offices of companies located in this province. Again let me quote my own words from that speech: "Ontario does realize how the location in this province of the head offices of many national organizations does give us added sources of revenue. We would be less than fair if we were unwilling to share the advantages of Quebec the people of Ontario were unwilling to have their money go to that province to give it special advantages while at the same time that province, as official-ly represented, was denying equality of obligation in the burdens of the war.

Stands By Statement.

An attempt is now being made to create the impression that Quebec does not gain any advantage under the baby bonus bill. Statements have been made that the people of Quebec will contribute as much or more in taxes than they will receive. That is not so. I stand by the statement I made. This bill is intended as a peacetime measure and presumably we will have returned to a peacetime basis of taxation when it is in operation.

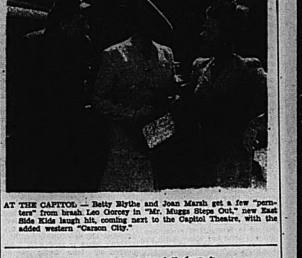
The statement I made was based upon calculations of the statistical branch of the Treasury Department of the Ontario Government. According to the analysis prepared for the Ontario statistician, Mr. H. J. Chater, the Province of Quebec will receive not less than $15,000,000 in excess of its tax contributions under the Baby Bonus Bill, taking the figure of $300,000,000 given by the Dominion Government as the total figure for the whole of Canada. I am prepared to accept Mr. Chater's computation. Mr. Chater's standing as a statistician has been established by the government officials of other provinces. He has been employed as the chairman of the continuing Dominion-Provincial Committee on Statistics.

Ontario Largest Revenue Producer.



Upon the basis of his computations, which have been discussed with Dominion and provincial officials at different times, Ontario contributes nearly 50 per cent of the total Dominion taxes and Quebec just over 35 per cent under normal taxing arrangements. The abnormal tax collections of the past two years cannot be taken as a basis for testing tax collections in the different provinces.

This was made all recently as last Friday by Mr. Cudmore, the Dominion statistician in a telegram to Mr. Chater.



We have our material ready for the Dominion-Provincial conference which we have been urging for nearly a year. I wrote Mr. King again yesterday, urging upon him the necessity for a conference at the earliest possible date. The closer we come to the possibility of peace, the more urgent is the need to lay the foundation for joint action to meet our problems and personal differences of opinion should be subordinated to the public way of joint action by all our governments.

In spite of the statements which Mr. King has made, I hope he will reconsider his decision and call the conference in view of the urgent need to lay a foundation for the rehabilitation-of our armed forces before demobilization begins.

So makers of the cowboy sagas are arranging their own awards and instead of an "Oscar"—which is what Hollywood calls the gold statuette—they'll award a miniature hickey bronkah.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop and ma were going out to play bridge at Mr. and Mrs. Sprunces's house on account of Mr. and Mrs. Sprunce playing at our house the last time, and pop said, To shave or not to shave, that is the question, I shaved once morning, naturally, but it seems to me I read somewhere that a gentleman always shaves twice a day when he has occasion calls for it, he said.

Of course you have to shave for land sakes, ma said. The Sprunces are the most pernickety people we know. Mr. Sprunce wouldn't dream of leaving the house unless his tie and shirt and socks harmonized like an artist's fondest dream, and Mrs. Sprunce would rather die than be caught wearing last season's hat, I mean even a hat that had practically never left the hat box, she said, and pop said, Then I suppose she really would pass out if she caught me wearing yesterday's whiskers in her house.

Well naturally, ma said. There's a time and a place for everything and this is certainly no exception, I mean people such as the Sprunces for land sakes, she said, and pop said, Then it's impossible. We can't go. Call them up and tell them we hope they have a nice time playing bridge and running, he said.

Now William is there any earthly mortal reason you cant give your self a quick shave? ma said, and pop said, There certainly is, it's a question of honor. I bet Steve Lewis I'd never shave twice a day again till Roosevelt was out of the White House, not especially that I wanted to see him out of the White House, but I thought it was a splendid opportunity to avoid shaving twice a day practically indefinitely, he said.

Oh, such a story, such a man, ma said. For land sakes go as you are, they'll probably take it for granted you have a naturally be-ard complexion and think nothing of it, she said, and pop said, Okay then I'll go as my honor is saved, let's go.

Which they did.

"THAT KEITH WOMAN"

By Phyllis Moore Gallagher

CHAPTER 1

The telephone rang shrilly at seven o'clock that saturday morning. I moment I was in bed, grumbling under my breath in the constant way I've learned from Dad and my associates on the Tribune where I'm Assistant Society Editor. Then I got up, shivered into my blue satin housecoat and mules, and did a neat twenty yard dash through my icy room and down a long hall.

My teeth chattered like musketry as I stuttered, "Hell-lo," and goose-pimples appeared me all over. Incidentally, they were the first of the goose-pimples I was to experience in the grim weeks that followed, but they popped up many times later for reasons far more chilling than mere cold. I had no way to know, of course, as I listened to that strained voice on the other end of the wire that I was being plunged headlong into a tangled black web of murder.

Pamela Keith said, "Letty? Letty, I'm glad you call off Sandra's debut this afternoon. I—I can't go through with it."

"What!" I cried. "Good Lord, Pamela!"

"I'm all—shot this morning, Letty."

I thought I understood. "Look, Pamela," I soothed. "Take some sedative, and relax with a long, cool julce—anything. Or—go soak your head! Do anything but don't call off the party. Why Pamela, the press would come down on you like a blitz! All your friends would fall head-first through the Social Register. And think of Sandra! You know how cruel young people can be! They'd call her debut the 'Keith paralytics by which they measure one another's importance.' Sandra would never live it down."

Poor little Sandra . . . Pamela Keith's dear daughter . . . who'd had enough to live down already.

"I—am thinking of Sandra," Pamela said slowly. "That's why I want you to announce the cancellation of the debut in your noon edition, Letty. Get it in the radio line somehow. Into all the early afternoon papers—"

"But, Pamela, you just can't do this. It's too late."

I talked on and on and when I'm really wound up I'm like a dictionary. Words flowed in my aid to this accomplishment naturally. My father, before he left Congress and became one of the horde of lame ducks in Washington, was called "Filibustering Sam"; and my mother saturated with a strange variety of facts, vague ideas, and ethical principles makes speeches before any woman's organization that will listen to her and some that won't, and talks in her own besides.

When I'd quite finished Pamela said: "All right, Letty. You win."

"That's the ticket. See you later, Pamela," I declared, and hung up. I was relieved for I'm extremely fond of little Sandra Keith. But later I was to wonder, conscience stricken, what course events would have taken if I hadn't insisted that Pamela Keith go on with her daughter's debut. Maybe none of those horrible tragedies would have bear to think about that.

I was standing there, trying taken place: maybe . . . But I can't to figure out what was cooking when Dad and Mother came pounding down the hall toward me.

"Letty, Randolph!" Mother said. She was obviously rubbed the wrong way and when she is she's as formidable and awesome as a stormtrooper—and she doesn't usually. I surveyed her with some rush anxiety, but what you've awakened the whole land. What will the follow-ing?"

Dad grumbled, "Yeah, what's up, Letty? You sounded like you were preaching a broadcast out here."

Suddenly I laughed, not with good reason. Mother and Dad at the crack of dawn are really something. Mother sleeps in everything but the kitchen stove because she's a cold type; and Dad, the exact opposite, wears nothing but an abbreviated, old-fashioned night-shirt split far up each side. Seeing them like that, I could not suspect that Dad is a tall distinguished-looking, gray-haired man who bowls over every widow and spinster who looks up into his steel-blue eyes. Mother is a real beauty. Brown-eyed, brown-haired, with a quick way of looking at you from lowered eyelids which makes you feel that she's attentively, fervently hoping she'll reveal something startlingly unique.

Strangely enough it was this antique-ish night-shirt of Dad's which played a small but important part in the trapping of a cold-blooded, ruthless killer.

"Well, what is up?" Dad repeated, and I explained as best I could.

Mother sighed. "That Keith woman," she said. "Everything happens to her. It doesn't surprise me she wanted to cancel Sandra's debut. The surprising thing is that she decided to bring out the child in the first place. If I'd had Pamela Keith's notoriety, I'd go in a hole and pull the hole in right after me."

"That's because you're a Zane Pitts type," Dad muttered, spoiling for a fight—and getting it. While the words flew between them, in the heat of an incendiary bomb, I stood there brooding about Pamela.

That Keith woman!

Well, Pamela Keith, only thirty-nine, had certainly been news in recen-lights ever since I could remember. A year or so ago I'd grown curious about how her big fortune-can ride into notoriety had started, and (a sleuth at heart) I had one whole day in the Tribune's morgue getting the low-down. It was plenty!

When Pamela was 19 she had eloped with one Wayne Courtney, a University of Virginia medical student. Shortly after that hatchet-hidden Pennsylvania honeymoon, her outraged parents had cajoled or bludgeoned her into the annulment of the marriage. Then she went to South America where she met Richard Keith, a New Yorker who'd made a fabulous fortune in Rio, but Richard Keith must have gone off the deep end in one big hurry. He flew back to Reno and began divorce proceedings against his young wife, the former Gladys Newcomb. That divorce hadn't been just another phase of swank living; a soignee denouement to a three brilliant seasons. Richard Keith divorced Gladys Newcomb Keith so he could marry Pamela — and he didn't give a hoot how he it!

Richard Keith and Pamela returned to Washington where Sandra was born, and where Keith was His left Pamela fabulously wealthy, killed in an automobile accident. Shortly after his funeral, Pamela, with one-year-old Sandra in tow, departed for South America to wind up Keith's war affairs there. She stayed two years. When Pamela finally returned to Washington, she made her Lawn Avenue mansion her permanent home—and things began to pop. In no time at all Pamela piled up a reputation with a capital R for herself. Even expurgated as most such printed stories are, the yarns didn't have much to the reader's imagination. As society editor, parties are all in a day's work for me, and I saw Pamela frequently. She fascinated me. She was so exciting, vivid- profligate of gaiety. I've watched her enter a party, her vitality lighting up the room like the gold-starred flash of a rocket. I've watched her entrapping men. She was really terrific—smooth as silk, but basically she was an upperdrawer hussy—and I might have sensed she'd come to some horrible end.

When her engagement to Luke Cramer, a nice Philadelphia gent, was announced, critical observers felt pretty low. They thought Luke deserved something a little less blighted—and, for one, I hoped something would happen to put an end to it before they got around to facing a preacher. But nothing had happened so far. . . .

Dad shattered my thoughts.

"Letty, I'm sorry Pamela Keith is such an ass!" Dad said. "Having Pamela pft-t-t-t-t, and she is all upset." said Dad, having finished shaving, and he'd met Cramer in the Mayflower cocktail lounge the other afternoon. He was with a very handsome woman. Very handsome."

"Maybe Wayne Courtney, Pamela's ex, has strayed in some trouble for her," Mother suggested. "He's in town you know. And why on earth did he return from London now, after a fifteen year absence? That bears thinking about, doesn't it?"

"Yes," I said. "It doesn't. Doctor Courtney came back to perform a delicate operation on a University of Virginia classmate of his. He told me all about it at a party the Cramers gave for Courtney before he had. And it was a sad story. His friend had a brain tumor and he wanted no one but Courtney, a specialist in that field to operate. I did see Courtney who had managed to get a clipper out of Washington. Nor for Pamela's sake and he'd soon be returning to London.

"I was surprised how young he looked," I said. "Like a kid, really. And he's forty at least."

"Practically senile!" stressed Dad, and laughed.

I let that pass and for a moment I reconstructed in detail a recent cocktail party. Knowing the low-down on that very elegant set Pamela's. I had studied Wayne Courtney intently. At a casual glance he did seem young, gay and light-hearted, interested only in sports and travel and amusement. But Wayne's wide mouth curved close to cynicism—and cruelty; his curiously grey-green eyes, beneath almost effeminately curling lashes, were cold. Brooding eyes which comes of introspection, analysis and thought—and I'd been dead set hunt. That deep hurt and somewhere, too — somewhere I thought, perhaps only contempt. I had burned in those green eyes for Luke Cramer's arm, had entered when Pamela Keith, clinging to the long, black-velvet drawing-room. Pam's eyes had met that frank gaze of Courtney's and she had looked as if she were going to faint on the spot.

For a long moment I had stood there watching them, my mind racing and that thought were moving behind their eyes, remembering how they had stopped dead on a snowy December night. They must have met in Rio, I'd decided, they must have loved each other terribly. . . . Then I remembered that Pamela had been in London before the war, I wondered if she'd yearned for Courtney all those years and had tried ways to get him back that night of her brave assurance—and had failed- Had there been so many ways for her life because she wanted to forget her first—and perhaps only genuine—romance?

Why can't do anything but guess at Pamela's reason for wanting to bring out Sandra, and finally tell my parents, and turned into the kitchen to make some coffee, with Dad trailing along.
